SENATE

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1940

The Reverend Edward Gabler, S. T. D., rector of Christ Episcopal Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O God, our Heavenly Father, who didst lead and guide the minds and hearts of our forefathers, accept our gratitude and thanks for the blessings and benefits Thou hast bestowed upon our native land.

Do Thou by Thy infinite wisdom guard and guide the Members of the Senate that they, through Thy Divine Help, may have a right judgment in all things. Take away from each one of us the hatred, prejudice, and fear that so easily sway our life and, in their place, may love, tolerance, and courage be the measure of our minds and hearts. Make us ever conscious of our duty toward Thee and our fellow man. Grant us, in all our uncertainties and doubts, to ask what Thou wouldst have us to do, that the spirit of wisdom may save us from all false choices, and in Thy light we may see light; and in Thy straight path, may not stumble. In His name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, February 15, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Callo-way, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 32):

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint committee consisting of three Senators and three Representatives, to be appointed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, respectively, is authorized to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President-elect of the United States on the 20th day of January, 1941.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the following concurrent resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

House Concurrent Resolution 45

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the proceedings at the various ceremonies in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the commencement of the first session of the Supreme Court of the United States, together with such additional matter as the Joint Committee on Arrangements in charge of these ceremonies may deem fitting and appropriate, in connection with this historical event, be printed, with illustrations, as a document; and that 200,000 additional copies be printed, of which 50,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 150,000 shall be for the use of the House of Representatives.

And—

House Concurrent Resolution 46

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act, approved March 1, 1907, the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, empowered to have printed for its use 2,000 additional copies of the hearings held before said committee during the current session on the resolution (H. J. Res. 407) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker pro tempore had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 3237) to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1939, and it was signed by the Vice President.

FOREIGN-TRADE ZONES REPORTS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, Acting Chairman, Foreign Trade Zones Board, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual reports of the Foreign Trade Zones Board for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1939, and the annual report of the city of New York covering operations of the foreign-trade zone at Stapleton, Staten Island, N. Y., during the calendar year 1938, which, with the accompanying reports, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORT OF RURAL ELECTRIFICATION ADMINISTRATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of the Administration for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1939, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Assembly of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

House Resolution 20

Whereas the United States of America has lately embarked upon a program of aviation expansion and to that end is cooperating with colleges and universities throughout the Nation in training students in flying; and

Whereas Chaffey Junior College and Pomona Junior College are now giving courses in aviation and conducting training programs for aviators pursuant to regulations of the Civil Aeronautics Authority; and

Whereas the Pomona-Ontario-Upland area of California is an especially advantageous locality for the training of aviators, in that it is in close proximity to Inglewood, Santa Monica, and Glendale, where much of the construction of aircraft is at present taking place, is free from fog and has ideal flying, climatic, and weather conditions, and is yet not so close to the Pacific coast as to cause an undesirable concentration of the aviation industry; and

Whereas the construction of an airport would greatly strengthen the aviation program of Chaffey Junior College and Pomona Junior College, be an important factor in promoting the aviation industry in California, and assist the national defense: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the Assembly of the State of California, That it hereby respectfully urges and memorializes the President, the Secretary of War, and the Congress of the United States to take such steps as are necessary to establish an emergency landing field within a short distance of Chaffey Junior College and Pomona Junior College; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly is hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President, the Vice President, and Secretary of War of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States; and that the Senators and Representatives from California are hereby respectfully urged to support any necessary or appropriate measures to accomplish the establishment of the emergency landing field.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Cheshire County Forest Fire Wardens' Association, Keene, N. H., favoring an adequate Federal appropriation for cooperative assistance to the State of New Hampshire for fire hazard reduction work, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Inland Lodge, No. 1010, Steel Workers Organizing Committee, C. I. O., of East Chicago, Ind., favoring an increase in the appropriation for the United States Housing Authority to at least $30,000,000 per annum, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the executive board of the New York State Industrial Union Council at Albany, N. Y., favoring the program of the national organization of the C. I. O., calling for the employment of a minimum of 3,000,000 persons on public works, a public-work program for all unemployed young people, an increase in old-age pensions to $60 per month at the age of 60, and so forth, and opposing undue expenditures for military purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions of the Central Labor Union of Augusta, Ga., and Muscle Shoals Building and Construction Trades Council, and Local No. 77, International Association of Bridge, Structural, and Ornamental Iron Workers, both of Sheffield, Ala., favoring completion of the Florida ship canal project, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the executive board of the New York State Industrial Union Council, assembled at Albany, N. Y., relative to the wage and hour law, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the executive board of the New York State Industrial Union Council, assembled at Albany, N. Y., favoring the enactment of Senate bill 1620, the so-called Wagner health bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Inland Lodge, No. 1010, Steel Workers Organizing Committee, C. I. O., of East Chicago, Ind., favoring adoption of the legislative program of the C. I. O. relative to the cane-sugar refining industry, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Inland Lodge No. 1010, Steel Workers Organizing Committee, C. I. O., of East Chicago, Ind., favoring amendment of the wage and hour law so as to include workers now outside the scope of the law, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Inland Lodge, No. 1010, Steel Workers Organizing Committee, C. I. O., of East Chicago, Ind., favoring the adoption of a public-works program to give work to the unemployed at a good living wage, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Inland Lodge, No. 1010, Steel Workers Organizing Committee, C. I. O., of East Chicago, Ind., favoring the enactment of Senate bill 1620, the so-called Wagner health bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Inland Lodge, No. 1010, Steel Workers Organizing Committee, C. I. O., of East Chicago, Ind., favoring amendments to strengthen the National Labor Relations Act in several particulars, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Inland Lodge, No. 1010, Steel Workers Organizing Committee, C. I. O., of East Chicago, Ind., favoring old-age pensions of $60 per month, with an additional $30 per month for wives of beneficiaries, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Inland Lodge, No. 1010, Steel Workers Organizing Committee, C. I. O., of East Chicago, Ind., favoring the levying of increased taxation on wealthy persons and corporations and the reduction of taxation on consuming groups and wage earners, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the executive board of the New York State Industrial Union Council, assembled at Albany, N. Y., protesting against involvement of the United States in foreign wars, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Inland Lodge, No. 1010, Steel Workers Organizing Committee, C. I. O., of East Chicago, Ind., protesting against participation by the United States in foreign wars and favoring necessary appropriations for domestic purposes rather than for military purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Council of Administration, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, assembled at Marion, Ohio, endorsing the operations of the so-called Dies committee investigating un-American activities and subversive forces in the United States and favoring the appropriation of adequate funds therefor, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Inland Lodge, No. 1010, Steel Workers Organizing Committee, C. I. O., of East Chicago, Ind., protesting against the operations of the so-called Dies committee investigating un-American activities, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by James Lardner Lodge, No. 452, International Workers Order, of Los Angeles, Calif., and the executive board of the New York State Industrial Union Council, assembled at Albany, N. Y., favoring the prompt enactment of pending antilynching legislation, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions of the National Farm Loan Associations of Panhandle and Perryton, Tex., favoring the restoration of the Farm Credit Administration to the status of an independent bureau and the placing of the operations of the Federal land banks, national farm-loan associations, and other units of the Administration under the supervision of a bipartisan board appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, which were referred to the Select Committee on Government Organization.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Inland Lodge, No. 1010, Steel Workers Organizing Committee, C. I. O., of East Chicago, Ind., favoring a conference of leaders of all industrial and social forces in America to endeavor to solve the problem of unemployment, which was referred to the Special Committee to Investigate Unemployment and Relief.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a memorial from the president and board of trustees of the New Jersey State Federation of Women's Clubs, Newark, N. J., remonstrating against the enactment of the bill (S. 1650) to promote peace and the national defense through a more equal distribution of the burdens of war by drafting the use of money according to ability to lend to the Government, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOLT presented a resolution of Local No. 6105, United Mine Workers of America, of Winding Gulf, W. Va., remonstrating against any change or amendment of the National Labor Relations Act or any reduction of the W. P. A. program, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BARKLEY presented the following resolution of the Legislature of Kentucky, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

Whereas there are more than 45,000 miles of poorly maintained county-system roads in Kentucky, and a large mileage of same in other States of the Nation; and

Whereas much of this mileage of bad county roads is necessary for the rural free delivery of United States mails, and for transportation of children to distant schools; and

Whereas this tremendous mileage of bad roads is the only outlet for daily business, social, and other purposes, available for the great majority of the rural population of the country; and

Whereas many miles of this county-system road have been constructed and hard surfaced by W. P. A. labor and materials and by counties, and said large mileage of roads, thus improved, is suffering serious damage and disintegration for the want of maintenance, due to the lack of funds: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of Kentucky (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to enact all laws and amendments to existing laws, and to do all other things necessary to aid both in the speedy construction and the substantial maintenance of the said county-system roads of Kentucky and of other States of the Nation, for the urgent reasons and purposes herein set forth; be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the senate forward one copy each of this resolution to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to our Senators and Representatives in the United States Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a resolution of the Federation of Women's Clubs of Texas, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Federal Government has assisted cities of the United States, including Texas, in eradicating slums and establishing in their place safe and sanitary dwellings for families of low income who could not otherwise afford decent living quarters, and thereby convert what was once the seat of crime and disease to centers of health and good citizenship; and

Whereas there is now pending in Congress legislation which has already passed the Senate which will make it possible for the United States Housing Authority to continue this great work and extend it into the field of rural housing, and give low-income families on the farms of our Nation now living in unhealthful and unsafe substandard dwelling places, decent, safe, and sanitary homes in which to live; and

Whereas it is the mothers who bear the burdens of making the home the center of family life and good citizenship, and the Federation of Women's Clubs of Texas is interested in better living conditions for all homes in Texas and in the Nation: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Federation of Women's Clubs of Texas, That it endorses the United States Housing Authority program as carried on through the housing authorities of the different States of the Union, and as carried on in Texas, and that it endorse and urge the passage of the legislation and appropriation now pending in Congress to continue the United States Housing Authority's program, and to extend it into the rural areas of the Nation; be it further

Resolved, That the Federation of Women's Clubs of Texas memorialize, and it hereby does memorialize the legislature of Texas to add provisions to its present housing enabling act to provide for rural housing through the establishment of county housing authorities to operate in rural areas as do the city housing authorities of Texas at the present time in cities and towns by the aid of the Federal Government through the United States Housing Authority, or by other appropriate means remedy the defect in the Texas housing laws which now prevent such Federal aid to rural housing which is so greatly needed in our State; be it further

Resolved, That the Governor of this State, Hon. W. Lee O'Daniel, be and hereby is memorialized to include said legislation in any call which he may make for a special session of the legislature in order that the great Commonwealth of Texas may share in the Nation's program for better homes and better standards of living for those who till the soil and make it possible for us all to live from the products of their labor.

Respectfully submitted.

MRS. VOLNEY W. TAYLOR.
MRS. GEORGE W. COX,
MRS. J. W. WALKER.
MRS. O. H. CARLISLE.
MRS. FLORENCE J. SCOTT.
MRS. WM. BACON.
MRS. JUD COLLIER.

[These names appeared on the resolution when it was presented by Mrs. Volney W. Taylor to the executive board for consideration and adoption. The resolution was adopted verbatim.]

Mr. PEPPER presented a resolution of the Board of County Commissioners of Duval County, Fla., which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas under the provisions of the Federal Social Security Act no protection is afforded to governmental employees; and

Whereas under existing laws Federal, State, county, and city employees are amenable to the provisions of the income-tax law; and

Whereas it would seem that governmental employees, except those under pensions, should be afforded benefits of the Social Security Act or the set-up under the unemployment-insurance system: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this Board of County Commissioners of Duval County, Fla., does hereby commend to the Members of Congress from the State of Florida that they make an investigation of the matters and things set forth in the preamble of this resolution and, if after an investigation the same appears economically feasible, that they initiate such legislation as would bring about the inclusion of governmental employees under the Social Security Act protection and/or unemployment-insurance system; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each Member of the National Congress from the State of Florida.

PREVENTION OF AND PUNISHMENT FOR LYNCHING

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Rev. H. Francis McClure, minister of the Brown Chapel, African Methodist Episcopal Church of Parsons, Kans., urging enactment into law of the antilynching bill.

I cannot state too strongly my own position in support of this bill. I have sponsored and supported this proposed legislation for years. I think the lynching record of the United States is a disgrace to our civilization. I sincerely feel that in many localities the local authorities are unable to afford proper protection to those accused of crime, or, at any rate, do not do so. The mob concludes that the accused persons are guilty and then takes the law into its own hands.

This condition should not, must not, be allowed to continue. The colored people for whom Reverend McClure speaks are entitled to the protection of their Government; and I believe that the antilynching bill pending now in a Senate subcommittee will offer a strong incentive to better law enforcement by local officials. The House measure should be reported at an early date and passed by the Senate without amendment.

I send the letter to the desk and ask that it be printed in the RECORD at this time as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,
Parsons, Kans., February 8, 1940.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,

United States Senate, Capitol Building, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: On behalf of the colored voters of this section of Kansas I am requested to write you and ask that you give the support of your honorable office to the pending antilynching bill now being considered by your honorable body.

We regard this very fine measure, not as legislation designed to benefit the American Negro alone, but as a further guarantee of the rights of the American people as prescribed, but not fully secured, by our Constitution. You are our highest representative in government and we feel that our request is in line and in perfect harmony with your fine judgment, and that you will support any move that may arise to limit debate and minimize the liability of a filibuster on the part of its opponents.

With abiding faith in your fine judgment and great courage we express to you in advance our sincere gratitude.

Respectfully yours,

H. FRANCIS MCCLURE,
Minister, Brown Chapel, A. M. E. Church, Parsons, Kans.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BARKLEY, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the bill (S. 3325) to provide for the transfer of the duplicates of certain books in the Library of Congress to the Beaufort Library, of Beaufort, S. C., reported it without amendment.

He also, from the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers, to which were referred, for examination and recommendation, six lists of records transmitted to the Senate by the Archivist of the United States which appeared to have no permanent value or historical interest, submitted reports thereon pursuant to law.

PROPOSED PUBLIC HEARINGS BY WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I desire to comment briefly on a bill which I am introducing at this time. The bill requires that hearings or meetings held by the Work Projects Administration with respect to the grievances of relief workers be open to the public.

It has long been a traditional American custom that any type of hearing on a matter of public concern is open to the general public and to the press.

At the instigation of a newspaperman in Wisconsin, I have investigated the policy of the Work Projects Administration regarding hearings on labor grievances and complaints. I am advised that the decision regarding public hearings "is one which necessarily must rest with the officials conducting such hearings."

According to the policy of the Administration, "it should be understood that an open hearing, attended by interested parties, is not necessarily a public hearing."

Quoting further:

Decisions in these matters must be determined on the basis of requirements of good administrative practice. The experience of this administration does not support the claim sometimes made that the review of labor or other grievances should be public. Many of the issues involved are minor matters which can be determined by less elaborate procedure. The methods used in a review should be determined by the officials in charge on the basis of fairness and efficiency, and it has not been found that public hearings serve either objective.

While it may be deemed expedient for this administration, as for other operating agencies of the Federal Government, to reserve the right to admit or exclude newspaper reporters, the press is not excluded from the findings.

This seems to be a fair enough procedure. I do not wish to intimate that the W. P. A. hearings are back-room star-chamber proceedings. I feel, however, that it is desirable to insure that the W. P. A. hearings be as democratic as possible.

W. P. A. and its administration have been subjected to much criticism. The grievance hearings of W. P. A. workers are rightly matters of public concern. The holding of hearings open to the public would be desirable not only in the interest of preserving a democratic procedure but also in the best interests of the W. P. A. itself.

So long as W. P. A. hearings are held in a manner which is free from politics, there is no reason why the meetings cannot be public. It is all very well for the W. P. A. to make their findings public after a hearing has been held. That does not explain how the findings have been reached. No court in the land could operate in that way. The mere publishing of a decision does not in any way indicate that the decision was entirely free from considerations of political expediency; and we know from what we heard in the last session of the Congress that too much attention was paid to political expediency. Reading the decision in no way indicates what factors have been weighed in writing it. Hearings where the press is excluded violate a very fundamental American concept.

When hearings deal with the human rights of unfortunate men who have been driven into the lowest class of W. P. A. labor, it is more than ever imperative that orderly, democratic, and public proceedings be held. The American worker in the low brackets of governmental work must not be reduced to the level of the serf. His rights must not be slaughtered on the altar of smug bureaucracy.

If there is politics in W. P. A. hearings, we want to know about it. If any unfair political considerations affect the findings of hearings for these unfortunates, we want to know about it.

Mr. President, at this time I introduce, for reference to the appropriate committee, a bill requiring that hearings or meetings held by the Work Projects Administration with respect to the grievances of relief workers be open to the public.

The bill (S. 3395) to require that hearings or meetings held by the Work Projects Administration with respect to the grievances of relief workers be open to the public was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have for a number of weeks felt it my duty to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that during the morning hour extended speeches should not be made, that it is a violation of the rule of the Senate. The practice has been indulged in on both sides of the Chamber, and I have no particular reference, of course, to the address made by the Senator from Wisconsin today, any more than to the remarks of other Senators. It seems that a habit is growing up of Senators seeking to make extended speeches during the morning hour, and I do not think that should be indulged in. The morning hour is set aside in order that the morning business may be proceeded with, and it seems to me that Senators who have addresses to deliver, political or otherwise, should wait until after the morning hour has been concluded.

I shall feel it my duty hereafter, regardless of who may seek to make an address during the morning hour, to make a point of order against any Senator who takes advantage of the morning hour to make an extended speech on any subject. Senators have a right to insert in the Record during the morning hour, under the proper heading, any communication, and describe what it is, but I certainly think that we should observe the rules of the Senate in regard to the conduct of business arising during the morning hour. I think I may say that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], the minority leader, with whom I conferred about this matter some days ago, concurs in my view.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Of course, the rules should be observed, and, so far as I am concerned, I usually try to have the rules and practices of the Senate followed. During the transaction of the routine morning business there should be no discussion or statement not having to do with the regular transaction of the business of the Senate. I am sure the Senator and I agree upon the value of orderly procedure.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the two Senators who are leaders of their respective parties do not invoke the rule, the Chair will call attention to the fact that such a practice is a violation of the rules. But the Chair did not feel that he was obligated to call attention to the matter until the Senators expressed themselves as they have just done.

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED

The following concurrent resolutions were referred to the Committee on Printing:

H. Con. Res. 45. Concurrent resolution authorizing the printing as a document the various proceedings in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the commencement of the first session of the Supreme Court of the United States; and

H. Con. Res. 46. Concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of additional copies of the hearings held before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, current session, on the resolution (H. THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. The routine morning business is closed. The calendar, under rule VIII, is in order. The clerk will proceed with the call of the calendar.

The resolution (S. Res. 58) providing that a calendar day's notice shall suffice in connection with suspension of a rule, was announced as first in order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Over.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, my attention was diverted. I had intended to ask unanimous consent that the calendar be called for action on unobjected-to bills and other measures.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Before the call is proceeded with, I feel that I should state that the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] last week gave notice that he desired to address the Senate this morning. I hope that the Chair will recognize the Senator from Florida to deliver his address at this time before we proceed with the call of the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the Senator from Florida addressing the Senate at this time? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Florida is recognized.

PERMANENT OLD-AGE ASSISTANCE

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, on last Thursday I again gave notice that I would take up Senate Joint Resolution 145, introduced by me for myself and the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] on June 5, 1939.

This amendment was considered by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary last summer, and on the 30th day of June 1939 it was reported out favorably by a vote of 10 to 6, and now constitutes No. 759 on the present Senate Calendar. It had been my purpose to discuss this important amendment before the close of the regular session last August or at the beginning of the special session which met in September, but due to an understanding between the executive department and the Congress, no matters other than the Neutrality Act were considered during the extra session. This is the first time I have had an opportunity, therefore, to present my views on this resolution to the Senate.

In view of the fact that there seems to be some doubt that Congress has the authority, even under the general-welfare clause of the Constitution, to enact a law providing for levying a tax to be placed in a separate special fund and paid out only for a specific purpose, such as old-age assistance, it has occurred to us to submit this proposed constitutional amendment—Senate Joint Resolution 145—which, in simple terms, provides that "The Congress shall have power to levy taxes for old-age assistance." Under this amendment Congress would have undoubted authority to provide in due course a method of taxation deemed best advisable upon the amendment being ratified by three-fourths of the States.

The present method of combining appropriations of money for old-age assistance with that raised by a tax on pay rolls for other purposes under the Social Security Act has not been satisfactory but has been a source of much unfavorable comment among our citizens generally.

The rather meager funds provided under the Social Security Act by the Federal and State Governments are not only indefinite but admittedly inadequate in many instances to provide the bare necessities of life, even for the comparatively few who are able to qualify for old-age assistance under its provisions.

We are receiving hundreds of letters complaining of the inadequacy of the present program for old-age assistance from all sections of our country, and, since it is a matter of national interest, as it affects our old people, also our young who should be kept in school and under parental influence through youth's adolescent years, I feel that each State in this Union should have the opportunity to pass judgment upon whether a definite program of old-age security should be permanently provided by way of a constitutional amendment. We therefore submit this proposed amendment for the consideration of Congress, with the hope that favorable action will be taken at this Seventy-sixth Congress.

The amendment, if adopted and ratified, does not undertake to state the form nor the amount of the tax, but leaves that to be worked out in due course by act of Congress carrying it into effect.

When the financial crash of 1929, and the economic depression which followed, came upon us, it found many thousands of our once self-sustaining older citizens in a deplorable situation. They had carefully provided for the "rainy day," but had not anticipated one of the most destructive financial crashes in history.

Those persons over 55 or 60 years of age, and even younger, finding themselves in dire need, sought employment, but soon learned that it was practically impossible to obtain employment either in the industries or even with the Federal Government, and mainly by reason of their age.

It was apparently presumed that they were not able to perform either manual or mental labor in a way or manner satisfactory to those from whom they sought employment. Millions of these fine old American people, who have endured the cold winters and the noonday heat, are to be found in every State in the Union. Many thousands, coming from nearly every State in the Union, are passing their declining years in Florida and California to avoid some of the rigors of the colder climates.

It is not alone a problem of my State, or of any particular State. It is a Nation-wide problem. We have heard much in recent years about securing old age against want and poverty. Many felt that the Social Security Act would ultimately meet the requirements for relief for old age and unemployment, and no doubt it is a very long step taken in the right direction. We often hear the statement that its operation is a severe burden not only on small business but upon the laborer who should be the main beneficiary. It is now claimed by many that it is so complicated and the amounts so meager that a more simple and workable method of old-age assistance should be provided; in fact, has become necessary.

We might as well recognize this fundamental truth: That in a democracy like America the national security of our people in the ultimate is rooted in economic contentment. To retain that democratic security we must keep our human efforts and natural resources harnessed in productive work.

Religious liberty, political liberty, economic liberty—these liberties that have heretofore made America the land of opportunity and contentment are like the foundation of a great building. It is futile to try to save the upper stories when the foundation stones are crumbling.

We become astonished and surprised when we take time to analyze our economic and social conditions as they are. In the United States we have less than 8 percent of the world's population. But under normal conditions we use about one-half of the world's rubber, a fifth of its sugar, two-thirds of its silk, a third of its coal, half of its pig iron, half of its copper, and more than two-thirds of its crude oil.

We operate over half of the world's telephone and telegraph lines and units. We own more than three-quarters of the automobiles of the earth and a third of the world's railroads. We produce more than half of the wheat, cotton, lead, and zinc of the world.

Deep in the ground at Fort Knox, Ky., we have hidden more than half the world's most precious monetary metal. We have two-thirds of the world's banking resources. Our people have a purchasing power greater than that of the 500,000,000 people of Europe and considerably larger than that of the billion people who live in Asia.

No people excels us in inventive genius or capacity for constructive building. Having no more natural resources and raw materials than possessed by some of the other great nations, we have, in our relatively short history, created by our own industry the wealthiest nation on earth. Yet we are still in a depression that began nearly 10 years ago, with about one out of every seven of our citizens living off some form of relief or governmental salary. The present dilemma is a test of our ingenuity and economic leadership in the world.

For 2 years I have joined my efforts with others here in Congress to try to force better prices by restricting the production of the farm, factory, and the shop. We have tried to give labor better wages by restricting the output of the worker. We have tried to keep millions of able-bodied men and women in productive tasks by various forms of work created by rule of law. This administration—more than any other in our history—has tried to and has greatly helped the underprivileged by a spending process, yet we all admit that we cannot lift ourselves out of the depression's quagmire by our own bootstraps. Our national debt has now reached the point where it equals nearly two-thirds of our combined national income.

Through private and public borrowing we have sought to maintain our economic pace. The experiment would be more pleasing if it were not for the fact that the restrictions on output plus relief cannot be continued indefinitely.

Many feel that the establishment of a permanent plan of old-age assistance would, at the same stroke, better secure our youth through modern education and employment. Generous provisions for securing the comfort of the old, and broadening opportunities for the youth in other civilized countries have been found valuable throughout the experience of past ages.

Families did this in the past before the machinery age. For the nation to aid when the family breaks down is fundamentally sound. A failure to do so is dangerous. A democracy, even such as ours, exists by the will and support of the citizens composing it, and we should be able, with all the experience of the past few years, to apply the very sound old principle of supply and demand to new conditions.

Looking back a decade we find that the underlying, fundamental assumptions of both the Hoover and Roosevelt administrations are very much the same: That to spend or lend public money and restrict agricultural production would enable our people and our resources to mark time until the economic crisis could pass.

Having diligently tried out this experiment, there are many who feel that we need to return to the planting of abundant harvests, the foundation of real wealth—that no one could starve in a land of plenty. Indeed there are times when these necessities of life are far more valuable to the well-being of our people than gold, silver, or currency.

We have learned many useful lessons from the operations of relief measures such as the W. P. A., and among them, that we cannot continue indefinitely to appropriate billions to provide jobs. Some say we may have started something we cannot stop. We must now lend our efforts to find an effective substitute, the burdens of which could be shared by all according to their productive capacity.

Referring more directly to the effect the prevailing economic condition of the country may have had upon the youth in recent years, I am informed that over 50 percent of the crime in this country, of the more serious types—kidnaping, highway robbery, bank robbery, gangsterism—is being committed by minors, mere boys in their teens. Twenty-five years ago, only the seasoned barroom gambling thug of mature age would have committed such felonies as we have become so accustomed to seeing described in the daily papers.

There is a reason or cause back of this social cancer that is eating at the very heart of our people, and it will remain a pitiful commentary upon our civic ingenuity and pride if a solution is not found to alleviate it. We can and must find the cause and, if possible, apply the age-old ounce of prevention at the very source, rather than that pound of cure usually administered by the courts after the jail doors are closed.

We are told that in recent years it has cost city, county, State, and National Governments several billion dollars annually to run down, convict, incarcerate, guard, feed, and take care of these boys who have thumbed their way down the broad road to crime.

When the crash came in 1929, there were millions of parents past middle age, with minor children, less than 10 years of age. Many are growing up through the adolescent age, without that guidance and protection traditionally and properly divided between parental control and the ever-dependable teachers of the common and private schools.

Many thousands of these boys of our older people became desperate when they realized that there was nothing at home to pay for their food, clothes, and schooling. They soon thumbed their way down the road by the tens of thousands. The records will show that many never returned. They went along until they became hungry. Long experience has shown that a human being will break in and steal rather than perish from hunger.

The first time the wayward boy was not detected. He went farther on the way and again became hungry, and again broke and entered. The third time he was caught, tried, and sentenced as a felon. He then took his place, at that most impressionable age, in prison among hardened criminals. From that hour he became an outcast and a liability to society.

The old heartbroken mother and father are still hunting for some way to earn enough to eke out an existence during their remaining days.

We do not know the gross amount that a sales or transaction tax, or gross income tax, or some other tax, would produce, nor what the average per month would be when divided among the eligible old people, but a 2-percent sales tax on purchases for an average family with an income of $2,500 annually is only $50. It is clear that the average annuity insurance, providing for retirement at 60, is costing many times that amount.

A reasonable and workable tax would permit the younger people to lay up for themselves an insurance policy, in the form of old-age security, that would allow them to retire on what may be termed a fixed annuity at the age of 60. There ought to be some kind of a dividend or annuity for the citizens of this country who have paid their taxes for 40 years and actually own a life interest in at least one share in the richest government on earth. The proposed plan is nothing more nor less than a gradual form of industrial or old-age insurance to which all would contribute during the 40 years people are usually able to provide for themselves.

There could be little danger of our citizens becoming Communists or Nazis or Fascists if every American citizen knew that he had a definite reserved annuity fund laid up for him with his Government to secure him against want after he is too old to provide for himself.

If we could thus retire several millions of our people over 60, there would be ample employment for the young men and women who now often find there is no demand or call for their services. I have thousands of letters from young men and women who are well qualified to fill responsible positions, but I can find places for only a portion of those who seek employment.

We are facing facts, not mere theories. The Gallup poll, on the outcome of the 1938 elections and on several important national questions, has become so accurate that it is now generally respected as a more or less reliable expression of the cross section of our citizens. The poll which appeared in the Sunday, February 26, 1939, issues of the daily press, shows very significant facts as to the public's views on old-age security or pensions.

Bearing in mind that we live in a democracy in which our citizens through our system may express their views, it has occurred to me to show the undoubted trend of public sentiment on this question.

On the direct question, Do you believe in Government old-age pensions? 94 percent voted "yes" and only 6 percent voted "no."

In the same poll this important question was asked: "Would you be willing to pay a sales tax or an income tax in order to provide these pensions?" Eighty-seven percent voted "yes" and 13 percent voted "no."

That is the answer of the people of the United States.

In closing his comment on this test Dr. Gallup made the very significant observation that—

1. The present Social Security Act falls short of providing what the public considers an adequate old-age-pension system at this time. Unless Congress and the various States take steps to remedy the situation a growth rather than a decline of glittering pension schemes can probably be expected.

2. Although few Americans completely accept the proposals of Dr. Townsend and other pension leaders, or would be willing to pay the taxes to make them effective, many voters say they are supporting these plans because they are "in the right direction."

Under the circumstances, and especially in view of the fact that this matter has been discussed from coast to coast and in every State, it is the thought of many that the people should have the opportunity to vote on it. The Congress can then work out in detail an act in line with the principles expressed in S. 3255 and S. 3270 to put it into operation.

IT IS A NATIONAL AND NOT A STATE OR LOCAL PROBLEM

Mr. President, this important social and economic problem was carefully and wisely analyzed in a recent decision of our United States Supreme Court in the case of Helvering v. Davis (301 U. S. 619), involving the constitutionality of title II of the Social Security Act, captioned "Federal old-age benefits."

The necessity for better securing the aged and thus the welfare of the Nation as a whole is so ably presented in the body of the opinion in that case that I shall here give that portion having reference to old-age security.

This is an epoch-making decision. It lays a new foundation for at least one important social edifice upon which to build old-age security.

Judge Cardozo, speaking for our Supreme Court, said:

The purge of Nation-wide calamity that began in 1929 has taught us many lessons. Not the least is the solidarity of interests that may once have seemed to be divided. Unemployment spreads from State to State, the hinterland is now settled that in pioneer days gave an avenue of escape. Spreading from State to State, unemployment is an ill, not particular but general, which may be checked, if Congress so determines, by the resources of the Nation. But the ill is all one or at least not greatly different whether men are thrown out of work because there is no longer work to do or because the disabilities of age make them incapable of doing it. Rescue becomes necessary irrespective of the cause. The hope behind this statute is to save men and women from the rigors of the poorhouse as well as from the haunting fear that such a lot awaits them when journey's end is near.

Congress did not improvise a judgment when it found that the award of old-age benefits would be conducive to the general welfare. The President's Committee on Economic Security made an investigation and report, aided by a research staff of Government officers and employees, and by an advisory council and seven other advisory groups. Extensive hearings followed before the House Committee on Ways and Means and the Senate Committee on Finance. A great mass of evidence was brought together supporting the policy which finds expression in the act. Among the relevant facts are these: The number of persons in the United States 65 years of age or over is increasing proportionately as well as absolutely. What is even more important, the number of such persons unable to take care of themselves is growing at a threatening pace.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. ANDREWS. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator prefer to make a connected statement without interruption, or is he willing to entertain a few questions?

Mr. ANDREWS. I believe I prefer to make my full statement without interruption. I think I can then better answer questions. The questions which the Senator has in mind may be answered a little later in my address.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is making a very able and comprehensive speech. I wish more Senators were present to get the benefit of it.

Mr. ANDREWS. I continue reading from the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States. My opinion may not be worth much, but the opinion of the Supreme Court is, and it is based upon facts brought before it in an orderly way.

More and more our population is becoming urban and industrial instead of rural and agricultural. The evidence is impressive that among industrial workers the younger men and women are preferred over the older. In times of retrenchment the older are commonly the first to go, and even if retained their wages are likely to be lowered. The plight of men and women at so low an age as 40 is hard, almost hopeless, when they are driven to seek for reemployment. Statistics are in the brief. A few illustrations will be chosen from many there collected. In 1930, out of 224 American factories investigated, 71, or almost one-third, had fixed maximum hiring age limits; in 4 plants the limit was under 40; in 41 it was under 46; in the other 153 plants there were no fixed limits, but in practice few were hired if they were over 50 years of age. With the loss of savings inevitable in periods of idleness, the fate of workers over 65, when thrown out of work, is little less than desperate. A recent study of the Social Security Board informs us that "one-fifth of the aged in the United States were receiving old-age assistance, emergency relief, institutional care, employment under the works program, or some other form of aid from public or private funds; two-fifths to one-half were dependent on friends and relatives; one-eighth had some income from earnings; and possibly one-sixth had some savings or property. Approximately 3 out of 4 persons 65 or over were probably dependent wholly or partially on others for support."

The problem is plainly national in area and dimensions. Moreover, laws of the separate States cannot deal with it effectively. Congress, at least, had a basis for that belief. State and local governments are often lacking in the resources that are necessary to finance an adequate program of security for the aged. This is brought out with a wealth of illustration in recent studies of the problem. Apart from the failure of resources, States and local governments are at times reluctant to increase so heavily the burden of taxation to be borne by their residents for fear of placing themselves in a position of economic disadvantage as compared with neighbors or competitors. We have seen this in our study of the problem of unemployment compensation. A system of old-age pensions has special dangers of its own, if put in force in one State and rejected in another. The existence of such a system is a bait to the needy and dependent elsewhere—encouraging them to migrate and seek a haven of repose. Only a power that is national can serve the interests of all.

Mr. President, some of the authorities noted by our Supreme Court in their opinion were cited in footnotes and are rather illuminating. They bear out with emphasis the Court's conclusions. I will give five of them here, as follows:

First. The Senate committee estimated, when investigating the Social Security Act, that over one-half of the people in the United States over 65 years of age and there are at least 6,000,000 of them—probably 8,000,000—are dependent upon others for support—Senate Report No. 628, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, page 4. A similar estimate was made in the report to the President of the Committee on Economic Security, 1935, page 24.

Second. A report of the Pennsylvania Commission on Old Age Pensions made in 1919, page 108, after a study of 16,281 persons and interviews with more than 3,500 persons 65 years and over, showed two-fifths with no income but wages and one-fourth supported by children; 1.5 percent had savings and 11.8 percent had property.

Third. A report on old-age pensions by the Massachusetts Commission on Pensions—Senate Report No. 5, 1925, pages 41, 52—showed that in 1924 two-thirds of those above 65 had, alone or with a spouse, less than $5,000 of property and one-fourth had none. Two-thirds of those with less than $5,000 and income of less than $1,000 were dependent in whole or in part on others for support. It may be mentioned in this connection that the people of the New England States have been more frugal and more careful to provide for their older people perhaps than have the people of any other section of the United States.

Fourth. A report of the New York State commission made in 1930—Legislative Document No. 67, 1930, page 39—showed a condition of total dependency as to 58 percent of those 65 and over, and 62 percent of those 70 and over.

Fifth. The National Government has found in connection with grants to States for old-age assistance under another title of the Social Security Act, title I, that in February 1937, 38.8 percent of all persons over 65 in Colorado received public assistance; in Oklahoma the percentage was 44.1; and in Texas, 37.5. In 10 States out of 40 with plans approved by the Social Security Board, more than 25 percent of those over 65 could meet the residence requirements and qualify under a means test and were actually receiving public aid.

No one will undertake to say that old-age security has not become one of the outstanding questions before the American people, and justice demands that ample provision be made for the necessary support, health, and comfort of these elderly citizens, who are practically ostracized from all employment.

As clearly pointed out by our Supreme Court, social security for the aged is more a National than a State duty and obligation. It cannot be solved by the enactment of a multiplicity of conflicting State laws, with unequal burdens of taxation, always subject to constant changes. It can be adequately solved only by a uniform basic law, national in scope, which will insure to the aged citizens of each State permanent and equal security with those in every other State.

The consensus of opinion among the leading economists and social workers is that the unemployment status through which we are passing is largely due to a lack of purchasing power of the average citizen; in other words, to a lack of ability of the American consumers to buy. The lack of ability to buy is, of course, chiefly due to a lack of employment. It is further conceded that employment is largely affected by the fact that many are compelled to labor many years beyond the age when they can deliver a dollar's worth of service for a dollar's worth of pay. Up to this time the only plan that has received Nation-wide study and the approval of many millions of our people is the plan proposed and known as the general-welfare bill recently re-formed and introduced in the Seventy-sixth Congress by the Senator from California

[Mr. DOWNNEY] as S. 3255, customarily referred to as the Dr. Townsend plan.

In brief, this revised plan provides for the levying and collecting of a Federal tax of 2 percent upon the gross income of all companies and persons over and above $250 per month from whatever source derived, the revenue collected therefrom to be placed in a separate general-welfare account, to be equally distributed among qualified citizens over the age of 60, and upon the specific conditions that the same shall not be hoarded but expended within a given period.

Such a tax imposed by the Federal Government would be equal and uniform and would necessarily be based upon ability to earn, in that those with small incomes would naturally pay less than those who receive much.

The plan does not require that the Federal Government issue any interest-bearing bonds, borrow any money, make appropriations, increase the national debt, or assume any financial obligations in any way to meet the provisions of the act, except to collect and receive the amounts brought in by reason of the special tax, to be paid out to each individual qualifying to receive it. The amount each beneficiary could receive of the total tax so collected would be determined by dividing the total sum collected by the number of eligible persons. Of course, no one can tell at this time just what that amount for each recipient will be.

It is believed by many who have carefully studied the whole situation that the carrying out of some plan in line with the principles stated in S. 3255, will result in the employment of millions of able-bodied persons now idle, not only by increasing production but by withdrawing large numbers of elderly people from the field of productive activity, thus creating new opportunities for the younger people of our land who would take their elders' places.

The indications are very convincing that this would ultimately make W. P. A. relief appropriations for unemployment almost, if not totally, unnecessary. As pointed out heretofore, it would decrease dangerous idleness and afford youth an opportunity for employment. It would necessarily reduce crime, thus saving additional billions of dollars of tax money expended annually in the enforcement of law, court costs, and other costs which follow in the wake of crime, including the maintenance of numerous prisons, reformatories, and protective agencies. Idleness and hunger are the twin beds of crime and lawlessness. It would also mean a tremendous saving in losses to our private citizens due directly to crime. For example, in 170 cities of over 25,000 population in 1938, detailed figures show that the value of property stolen, either by robbery, burglary, larceny, or theft, was over $28,000,000.

Perhaps the greatest benefit ultimately and continuously to be derived from the plan of old-age security would be the fact that it would inspire a greater spirit of loyalty to our Government and our American institutions. No one, whether foreign born or native citizen, regardless of any organizations, political or otherwise, to which he may belong, would have any incentive to try to tear down institutions under a government such as ours, definitely providing him against the infirmities of declining years, when he is no longer able properly to provide the comforts of life. A citizen will not tear down the temple which shelters him.

It would likewise be an incentive to youth, including the young married man, to pay the tax, in order that his old mother and father might be properly taken care of when they shall have reached the evening of life. Everyone could face old age with an assurance that he would not be a burden upon his children or his grandchildren. It is significant here to state that crime has seldom been chargeable to the idleness of persons after the age of 60.

It is believed by many who have made a close study of the old-age plan that it will have a strong tendency to substitute an economy of plenty for an economy of scarcity. It would likewise effect tremendous savings in the cost of operating and maintaining numerous county, State, and municipal institutions now known as homes for old people, reform schools for indigent children, and other like institutions which are direct burdens upon local governmental taxing units.

It is claimed that more than half of the old people now maintained at the hospitals for the mentally defective are not there because of their being a menace or dangerous to society, but are there classified as persons afflicted with senile dementia, which is nothing more nor less than old age. The fact that these dear old people have had to be sent away from their loved ones to spend their last days behind high walls and barred gates, remains a sad commentary upon our boasted humanitarian civilization.

The people of the State of Florida, through its legislature, have adopted and presented a solemn memorial to this Congress which is now here on record, pointing out the facts which I have mentioned, and in which they declare that old-age assistance is a national question.

We are further alarmed when we consider that crime is now the largest economic problem of the United States, particularly with regard to the fabulous expenditures it involves. The annual cost of crime in this country is estimated to be $15,000,000,000; and it will readily be admitted that a $15,000,000,000 enterprise, even in these days and times, is large in every sense of the word. This predatory activity levies and collects a tax of nearly $120 annually for every man, woman, and child in our Nation. Out of every dollar of national income, 25 cents must be charged off to crime.

In order to present the problem in a still more realistic manner, may I say that this $15,000,000,000 annual cost of crime is 400 percent greater than the national annual cost of education, which is a little over $3,000,000,000. In other words, the onslaughts of these criminal armies are costing us 400 percent more than we are spending in the education of the juvenile members of our communities.

If we spent more upon constructive education, our crime bill would be less. It may be further noted that the cost of lawlessness is 25 percent more than our total annual tax bill of approximately $12,000,000,000.

We have youth in crime because we have failed to provide youth with proper upbringing and opportunities. Only in the rarest instances of diseased minds can we say that the first offender commits crimes out of sheer antisocial sentiments. Children merge into crime because of deep-laid faults in society, such as poverty, idleness, and because their elders too often neglect them for pleasure.

Today, as you know, 20 percent of our worst crimes are the work of persons who have not yet even reached the voting age. This means that one-fifth of all murders, thieveries, robberies, and the other malignant outrages against our people are committed by boys in their teens—youths who should be reaching the threshold of useful lives.

This 20 percent falls tragically short of the boasted ideals of American citizenship. It is not a pleasant picture. It is not a healthful outlook. It is a deplorable condition when a nation such as America must bow under the disgrace of a set of circumstances in which one-fifth of our most deadly outlaws, our murderers, our machine-gunning desperadoes are little beyond childhood. It is incumbent upon all of us, therefore, to recognize and admit the causes for such conditions, and, reaching beyond, to search for the means by which they may be remedied.

When we are confronted with the fact that the crime army of America includes more than 700,000 boys and girls of less than voting age who, at the very threshold of life, were cut off from worthy careers, then, indeed, the other side of the cost of crime is recognized as a ghastly one. But the human costs do not end even here.

What of the 700,000 mothers who risked their lives to bring these boys and girls into the world? What of the mothers and fathers with heads bowed down in sorrow, the lines of which cannot be effaced?

President Coolidge, in speaking on this subject, made a profound statement. He said:

To my mind, the great strength of society lies in its recognition of the necessity of discipline.

If the truth of that statement could only be instilled into the mind of every parent in the United States, we would have less crime. Discipline seems to have been forgotten. Laxity of administration in the duties of parenthood threatens the foundations upon which the family is based. It is all very well to say that youth should have its fling, but statistics show that the way of youth is tending too swiftly toward the path of crime. The family circle, once sacred in every American home, has been too often transferred from the fireside to the tonneau of a "tin lizzie."

There is no reasonable explanation which the fathers and mothers of America can make for this outrageous situation. They are allowing the reins to slip from their hands; they have allowed their own personal pleasures to become uppermost; they have allowed the spirit of family discipline to become weakened, and thus youth has lingered along the roads of life which must lead, all too often, to disillusionment. Parents have become too engrossed in enjoying the fleshpots and pleasures of the age to give proper attention to their offspring.

Discipline must be reestablished in the American home before we can look for better conditions. The father who thinks too much about golf to care what his son is doing; the mother who is so eager for bridge that she pretends to believe that her daughter, in a parked car beside the roadway, is merely indulging in a bit of harmless pleasure, must either recast their ideas or ultimately realize that they are unable to govern their own children for whose existence and upbringing they are responsible.

The law of sex with all its temptations and weaknesses, will never change until the laws of nature change; the laws of nature, like those of the Medes and Persians, change not.

In considering the problem of old-age assistance, the primary questions are: (1) How should it be initiated? and (2) How can it be financed?

The United States in this regard has lagged far behind other civilized nations, but of late years there has come a growing recognition of this, not only as it relates to our aged, but to youth as an economic factor in our national life.

The attitude toward this matter has steadily veered from the single idea of old-age assistance as a pension, per se, to a recognition of the fact that it likewise involves an economic factor affecting the lives of middle-aged and young people, all of whom must grow old some time. So the problem has become not only one of establishing a living standard for superannuates, but because of the large number affected and the consequent cost, a solution of the problem must be devised in such manner as will harmonize it with other national economic measures.

In other words, the old-age assistance problem has definitely become a part of any program for national recovery and relief. It cannot be otherwise, for current sources of revenue are not sufficient to take care of our relief problem, and it is the consensus of opinion that we should not add to our present methods of taxation from which the people are crying for relief.

Industry is adding to the acuteness of the situation by its continuous methods of lowering the age limit for employees. This is part of the trend brought about by the recognition that employers' liability insurance discloses that a majority of claims paid are to those past the age of 40, and the employer refuses to take a chance on the efficiency of a worker where Nature's processes of mental reaction to danger stimuli are operating against the older worker.

Therefore the problem of old-age assistance will become more and more acute as time goes on. The importance of making our desire to solve this situation in favor of the old people an interrelated measure with all the rest of our economic planning becomes pressingly important. Population trends indicate that, in the passing of the years, an ever-increasing percentage of our people will come under the classification of superannuates, and any system of assistance for this growing class must be undertaken on a pay-as-you-go basis, or we shall, as a nation, become bankrupt.

The matter of financing this program out of the revenue derived from incomes over a certain amount is practical and worthy of consideration. Some special form of tax must therefore be devised.

But when we come to the matter of levying new forms of taxes, particularly for specific purposes, we run into certain limitations, or at least implications in the Constitution. Some have said that the Congress already has the power to levy specific taxes for old-age assistance. Perhaps it has, but there are those equally sincere who have their doubts about the matter.

Let us remove these doubts by amending the Constitution on this point. This will save litigation, time loss, and serve to hearten our people in the belief that the Congress is mindful of their problem. If the only result of this amendment would be to show to the people of our Nation, both old and young, that we know their trouble and are seeking to help them, the new hope that would kindle in their breasts would amply pay us.

We must never lose sight of the fact that this problem of old-age assistance will become more acute as time passes. Technological advances, the lowering of age limits in industry, and the changing percentage of old to young in our population, all tend to emphasize the importance of this type of legislation. We should not leave the welfare of these old people, of whom our loved ones are or will be a part, to the vagaries and uncertainties of succeeding Congresses.

In the face of factual data available to all of us daily we should not leave the lot of the old ones in our midst to become a football of future acts of the Congress. We can fix the assurance to old age in our basic law; if it is unjust, it will be repealed; have no fear of that. But our duty to the old is plain. Regardless of any legislation which may come to us, we may now do more to add to the hopeful security of yet unborn generations by passing this amendment than all the temporary legislation we might pass in a whole session.

It will be noted that this joint resolution calls for the submission of this amendment to State conventions for their approval, according to the Constitution. We have a vexing old-age and youth problem in our midst today. All over this land of ours there are millions of our people who have espoused the principles of the Townsend plan and other plans. This joint resolution refers the amendment back to the people themselves, from whom we all receive our authority to act. In our perplexity we can thus consult with those whose franchise directed us here to do their service.

This matter rises above all party considerations. It is too important to our people to resolve it by party considerations. It is an amendment whereby all our people can take this important step and solve it once and for all.

Several Senators have asked me about the constitutional need for an amendment giving Congress the power to levy taxes for old-age assistance.

Of course, the question of constitutional need is of the utmost importance and is one reason for this proposed legislation. There are two other needs for it. One is to enable the testing of public opinion on the question, and the other is having the power of Congress to levy taxes for old-age assistance written into our fundamental law.

In order to elucidate the question of constitutional need and to show that there is a grave doubt in the minds of well-qualified persons as to the power of Congress to levy taxes for a specific purpose, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] and I contend that there still exists considerable doubt as to the validity of earmarking taxes for a specific purpose, and we submit authorities which I shall cite in a moment as a basis for our belief. Many informed people believe that such a tax is not a "true" tax, but, rather, an "exaction" or "appropriation of money from one group for the benefit of another," which is in violation of the due-process clause. They maintain that such taxes are not levies "for the support of the Government," but are being used to pay pensions to specific individuals.

This constitutional amendment—Senate Joint Resolution 145—has been introduced in order to resolve this grave doubt.

EVIDENCE THAT THIS IMPORTANT CONSTITUTIONAL PROBLEM REMAINS UNSETTLED

(1) There is no judicial decision which meets the particular problem embodied in Senate Joint Resolution 145 foursquare.

(2) Professor Corwin, in his book, The Twilight of the Supreme Court, page 176, wrote:

So long as Congress has the prudence to lay and collect taxes without specifying the purposes to which the proceeds from any particular tax are to be devoted, it may continue to appropriate the national funds without judicial let or hindrance.

(3) The Social Security Act of 1935: Experts who assisted in the drafting of this measure clearly indicate that the separation of the benefit provisions in title II from the taxing provisions was dictated by constitutional considerations.

(a) Prof. J. Douglas Brown in his article, The Development of the Old-Age Insurance Provisions of the Social Security Act in Law and Contemporary Problems, volume 3, page 193, wrote:

The development of a formula for Federal action within constitutional limitations was early recognized as the key to a sound solution to the problem. The proposal to separate the contribution and benefit features of one legislation into two separate measures based on the taxing and appropriation powers of the Federal Government, was advanced early in the deliberations of the staff and the technical board. The absence of any need for elaborate regulatory material in either measure gave basis for the hope that the courts would not question the exercise of these broad Federal powers if clear-cut separation were possible. The staff was bolstered in this hope by the approval of the plan by a number of outstanding students of constitutional law.

The drafting of two distinctly separate titles covering the tax and benefit features of the proposed system proved a difficult task. Since the contributions, now taxes, were necessarily converted into the general funds of the Treasury, some formula had to be developed for the reapportionment of an equivalent amount from general funds to an old-age reserve account.

As a result of this necessary adjustment to the exigencies of constitutional law, the character of the scheme was fundamentally different from that first considered by the staff.

(b) Prof. Paul H. Douglas, in his book, Social Security in the United States, wrote regarding compulsory old-age insurance—page 157:

The taxes or contributions required to provide the necessary funds are levied under title VIII of the bill, while the scale of monthly annuities and benefits is specified under title II. Here, as in the unemployment-insurance features of the bill, the revenue portions are separated from the sections which appropriate money because of the belief that this will enable the act better to run the constitutional gamut.

Perhaps the weakest section of the Security Act from a constitutional standpoint is that which provides for mandatory old-age insurance. While title VIII, which levies taxes upon employers and employees, is formally distinct from title II, which prescribes the scale of benefits to those over the age of 65 and to the heirs of the deceased, there is in fact a close and immediate connection between them. The individual benefits to be paid are computed upon the basis of the contributions or taxes levied and upon nothing else. It will undoubtedly be charged that these titles of the act in effect, therefore, prescribe the specific purpose for which the tax is levied, and that they are consequently unconstitutional since they launch the Federal Government into the performance of functions not specifically delegated to it by the Constitution. There is certainly very real danger that such may indeed be the fate of this feature of the act.

(4) The 1939 amendments to the Social Security Act: That there is still doubt as to the constitutionality of earmarking tax proceeds for a special purpose is indicated by this latest old-age measure. The device of using funds in the General Treasury rather than unquestionably earmarked tax receipts is continued here.

(5) United States v. Butler (56 Sup. Ct. 312, 1936): As said by Mr. Justice Roberts in delivering the opinion of the Court in the A. A. A. decision with respect to processing taxes levied upon processors, the proceeds of which were to be paid to certain producers of agricultural products:

A tax, in the general understanding of the term, and as used in the Constitution, signifies an exaction for the Government. The word has never been thought to connote the expropriation of money for one group for the benefit of another.

(6) Mr. Justice Cardozo, speaking for the Court, in declaring the Social Security Act to be constitutional, neatly avoided the important question of earmarking. This is sufficient reason to cast doubt on the whole question. He said:

Third. Title II being valid, there is no occasion to inquire whether title VIII would have to fall if title II were set at naught.

The argument for the respondent is that the provisions of the two titles dovetail in such a way as to justify the conclusion that Congress would have been unwilling to pass one without the other. The argument for petitioners is that the tax moneys are not earmarked, and that Congress is at liberty to spend them as it will. The usual separability clause is embodied in the act, section 1103. We find it unnecessary to make a choice between the arguments, and so leave the question open.

(7) Robert Jackson, then Assistant Attorney General, arguing the Government's case in Seward Machine Co. v. Davis (301 U. S. 548), which involved the unemployment compensation features of the Social Security Act (titles IX and III), gave careful consideration to this problem. In his oral argument, he said:

The relation of this tax to the appropriation is entirely unestablished, either by the act itself or by the facts in the case. In the first place, the appropriation under section 301, if it be construed as an appropriation, began before the tax was payable. The appropriation is not measured by the proceeds of the tax. The tax is not earmarked for this purpose. There is no equivalence between the amounts set aside by this section and the proceeds of the tax.

The authorities cited sustain the position I have taken, that it would require a constitutional amendment to authorize a special tax for old-age assistance and to require that the money collected be placed in a fund to be used for the one purpose exclusively. The taxes assessed and collected by the Federal Government at the present time are put into a common fund, and we draw on that as long as any remains, and when there is no more, we issue bonds. We have issued and outstanding nearly $40,000,000,000 of bonds at the present time.

The plan I have discussed contemplates that this financial problem shall be met by a specific tax, which all who come under its terms will be required to pay, the money to be placed in a special fund to be used for the one purpose only, somewhat like the reserve funds of the great life-insurance companies are used.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have enjoyed the comprehensive speech made by the able Senator from Florida in its relation to Senate Joint Resolution 145. I hope his remarks may have wide circulation. I believe this joint resolution has been on the Senate Calendar since July of last year.

Mr. ANDREWS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McNARY. I know the desire of the Senator from Florida, and of the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], is for early consideration of the joint resolution, and I assure the Senator that I shall be glad to cooperate with him at any time to have it taken up for consideration and a final vote obtained.

Mr. ANDREWS. I thank the Senator.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Frazier	Lee	Schwartz
Andrews	George	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Gerry	Lucas	Sheppard
Austin	Gibson	Lundeen	Shipstead
Bailey	Gillette	McCarran	Slattery
Bankhead	Glass	McKellar	Smith
Barkley	Green	McNary	Stewart
Bilbo	Guffey	Maloney	Taft
Brown	Gurney	Mead	Thomas, Idaho
Bulow	Hale	Miller	Thomas, Okla.
Burke	Harrison	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Byrd	Hatch	Murray	Tobey
Byrnes	Hayden	Neely	Townsend
Capper	Herring	Norris	Truman
Chandler	Hill	Nye	Vandenberg
Chavez	Holt	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys
Clark, Idaho	Hughes	Pepper	Wagner
Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman	White
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Reed	Wiley
Davis	King	Reynolds
Donahey	La Follette	Russell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The clerk will state the next number on the calendar.

RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 74) providing for a Committee on Civil Aviation was announced as next in order.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask that the resolution be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 45) to amend the act of July 3, 1926, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment in claims which the Crow Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, this joint resolution and the bills immediately following have heretofore been objected to by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. I have no objection to the measures being considered, but I wonder if the Senator's attention has been called to the situation existing today.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a bill was passed under the terms of which a special committee was appointed, of which the chairman is the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. The committee has conducted hearings, and I hope the report will be submitted in the near future. I ask that the joint resolution and the bills, beginning with Calendar No. 83 down to and including Calendar No. 116, be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The seven bills and the joint resolution, beginning with Calendar No. 83, Senate Joint Resolution 45, down to and including Calendar No. 116, Senate bill 498, will be passed over.

The joint resolution and bills passed over are as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 45, to amend the act of July 3, 1926, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment in claims which the Crow Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes."

S. 783, to amend the act, as amended, entitled "An act to refer the claims of the Delaware Indians to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States," approved February 7, 1925.

S. 790, conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of the Prairie Band or Tribe of Pottawatomie Indians of Kansas and Wisconsin against the United States.

S. 1222, authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Osage Tribe of Indians on account of lands sold by the United States.

S. 767, conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Assiniboine Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes.

S. 864, authorizing the Arapahoe and Cheyenne Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and for other purposes.

S. 498, authorizing an appropriation to carry out the provisions of section 26 of the agreement with the Muskogee or Creek Tribe of Indians, approved March 1, 1901.

The bill (S. 1303) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, with respect to cotton, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 795) to provide for the education of all types of physically handicapped children, to make an appropriation of money therefor, and to regulate its expenditure, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1681) to amend section 107 of the Judicial Code to create a mountain district in the State of Tennessee, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. I ask that the bill be passed over.

Mr. McKELLAR. As to that bill, which was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary some time ago, certain questions have been raised, for which reason I think it ought to be returned to the committee. I desire to ask that it be recommended to the committee with the understanding, if I may have it, with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], who is also interested in the measure, that we may have an early hearing on the measure before the committee.

Mr. AUSTIN. So far as I am concerned, Mr. President, I am ready to do what I can toward that end.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 1681, Calendar No. 227, will be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Frazier	Lee	Schwartz
Andrews	George	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Gerry	Lucas	Sheppard
Austin	Gibson	Lundeen	Shipstead
Bailey	Gillette	McCarran	Slatery

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

AGREEMENT WITH MUSKOGEE OR CREEK TRIBE OF INDIANS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 498, Calendar No. 116, which has previously been passed over, and which was introduced by me and favorably reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Reed	Wiley
Davis	King	Reynolds
Donahey	La Follette	Russell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The clerk will state the next bill on the calendar.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 570) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in agricultural products; to prevent unfair competition; to provide for the orderly marketing of such products; to promote the general welfare by assuring an abundant and permanent supply of such products by securing to the producers a minimum price of not less than cost of production, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over! Over!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I make a point of order against the suggestion of the absence of a quorum. I understand there is no precedent on this question. I make the point of order that the Senate has transacted no business.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senate has disposed of a bill on the calendar.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The refusal to transact business is not the transaction of business.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I shall be glad to be heard on that question if the Chair has any doubts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The refusal to take up a bill on the calendar is as much an adverse disposal of the measure for the present as would be taking up the bill and failing to pass it. It is as much the transaction of business as though the bill were taken up and passed. I submit that the uniform precedents of the Senate are to the effect that any action of the Senate—even the recognition of a Senator for a unanimous-consent request—amounts to the transaction of business, and justifies the point of order of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule. The present occupant of the Chair is of the opinion that the Senate, by declaring its unwillingness to take action, has taken action; and therefore the point of no quorum made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] is sustained. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Frazier	Lee	Schwartz
Andrews	George	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Gerry	Lucas	Sheppard

Davis	King	Reynolds
Donahey	La Follette	Russell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The clerk will state the next bill on the calendar.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1305) to promote the general welfare through appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public education, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Reed	Wiley
Davis	King	Reynolds
Donahey	La Follette	Russell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state the inquiry.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to ask the Chair what the parliamentary situation is, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the Senate is now operating under a unanimous-consent rule, and, therefore, rule VIII of the Senate's order of business is temporarily suspended. The clerk will state the next number on the calendar.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2203) to amend certain sections of the Social Security Act was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Frazier	Lee	Schwartz

The Clerk will state the next number on the calendar.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 34) for the relief of W. K. Richardson was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The clerk will state the next business on the calendar.

PROHIBITION OF ADVERTISING OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES BY RADIO

The bill (S. 517) to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by radio was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, as I understand the ruling of the Chair, this bill cannot be voted upon at the present time by a voice or by a ye-and-nay vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that since the Senate is operating under the unanimous-consent rule, one objection is sufficient to require the bill to go over at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That being the situation, Mr. President, it is not the purpose of the junior Senator from Colorado to work any hardship whatever upon the Senate.

This bill has been upon the calendar since April 28 of last year. Last summer I served notice upon the Senate that early in January I should bring up the bill. I had an opportunity to bring up the bill in January, but I was told by my majority leader that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] wanted to be present when the bill should be considered. The Senator from Wisconsin was detained in California on important business connected with the affairs of the Senate; and, out of courtesy to him, I did not call up the bill in January.

I think this bill should come before the Senate and be disposed of in the regular way. I do not think the present obstructionist policy is at all in keeping with the dignity of the Senate; but that is not the point to be argued, and it is not for me to determine. So I will say to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] that today I shall not move to have this bill taken up by the Senate for disposal. At some future time I expect to make such a motion.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to express my appreciation of the Senator's attitude in this matter. Of course, he realizes that with the procedure which has been followed for the past few minutes we should not get through the call of the calendar today, so that he would not have an opportunity to make his motion today anyway.

I appreciate the Senator's attitude. I can confirm what he has said. This bill has been on the calendar ever since last April. The Senator from Colorado is its author, and the bill was reported by one of the standing committees of the Senate. Regardless of its merits, and regardless of whether or not it is wise for Congress to pick out a particular subject and say that it shall not be advertised over the radio, which is not a matter upon which I now wish to pass or to comment, I have taken the position with respect to this and other measures that a bill reported by a standing committee is entitled to be considered by the Senate; and I have never regarded it as a part of my duty as majority leader to say to any Senator that he could not or ought not to make an effort to get up a bill in which he was interested, or of which he was the author.

The Senator from Colorado did speak to me in January about this bill. I knew that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] was absent on official business; and the Senator from Colorado very readily agreed that it would be improper, or at least he did not desire, to take advantage of the absence of the Senator from Wisconsin to take up the bill. The Senator from Colorado has been very patient and considerate of every Senator in regard to this measure, and I appreciate his present attitude.

I think he is acting wisely, however, in stating to the Senate that he has no purpose to try to get the bill up today because it would interfere with other desirable legislation, and practically nothing would be accomplished. I thank the Senator from Colorado for his generous attitude in the matter.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank the majority leader for what he has said. At some future time I shall move to bring the bill up, but such a motion will not be made by me today.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if I may be indulged for just a moment, in view of what has been said I am very glad indeed to bear witness to what the Senator from Colorado and the majority leader have said. In my judgment, it would not have been possible to consider the bill today, because I do not believe we would have completed the calendar. It was certainly my intention to make the point of no quorum after action on every bill taken up for consideration.

As to what the Senator from Colorado has said about it not being in keeping with the dignity of the United States Senate for a Senator to exercise his constitutional right to make the point of no quorum, I merely refer him to the Constitution of the United States. I am willing to take the judgment of George Washington and the other founding fathers on that subject in preference to the opinion of the Senator from Colorado, much as I respect his judgment.

I merely desire also to serve notice that when the Senator from Colorado, in pursuance of his right, does attempt to get the measure before the Senate, in pursuance of my right as a United States Senator, I shall oppose it by every proper and honorable means.

In the meantime, I send forward an amendment which I intend to propose to the bill at the proper time, so that it may be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be received and printed, and will lie on the table. The clerk will call the next measure on the calendar.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1730) to amend the civil-service law to permit certain employees of the legislative branch of the Government to be transferred to positions under the competitive classified civil service was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RELIEF OF SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR VOLUNTEER OFFICERS AND SOLDIERS

The bill (H. R. 289) for the relief of officers and soldiers of the Volunteer Service of the United States, mustered into service for the War with Spain, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this bill passed the Senate upon two occasions, and upon each occasion was vetoed by the President of the United States. I feel it is a measure on which the Senate should express itself, and I shall have no objection later, when the time is not so restricted, if someone who favors the bill will move to take it up and have the President's veto considered, and then such consideration given to the bill as its merits require. But for the present I object to consideration, in view of the limited time at our disposal, and the fact that the bill has been twice vetoed. I think the Senate should have a chance to consider it in the light of the President's veto before taking final action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1650) to promote peace and the national defense through a more equal distribution of the burdens of war by drafting the use of money according to ability to lend to the Government, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 915) to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BUSINESS AND ECONOMIC RESEARCH

The bill (S. 1740) to promote business and economic research in the United States by establishing and maintaining in connection with State university schools of business administration, research stations to cooperate with the Department of Commerce, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, if the Senator who objected will withhold his objection, I should like to make a brief explanation of the bill.

The Secretary of Commerce is authorized by the bill to establish business-research stations at State and Territorial universities and other institutions. Once established, such a station can be discontinued or transferred to another qualified institution after a hearing by the Secretary.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, what appropriation is proposed?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall come to that. I am about to give a brief description of the bill.

These stations are to be under the direction of the college of business administration, or, if there is no such college, the department of the university in which business subjects are taught, which will cooperate with the Department of Commerce in conducting research in business.

The bill prescribes that, to enable the business-research stations to function in pursuance of its provisions, there is authorized to be appropriated, to be paid to each institution at which a business-research station is established under the bill, a sum not to exceed $20,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941; and, similarly, a maximum for each succeeding year as follows: $30,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, inclusive of the first $20,000; $40,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, inclusive of the first $20,000, and $40,000 for each fiscal year thereafter; provided, that no payment in excess of $20,000 shall be made to any such institution for any fiscal year unless such institution, or the State for such institution, makes available for the use of such institution for each fiscal year, out of funds not acquired under the bill, an amount equal to such excess; and provided further, that no payments made under the bill shall be used by any such institution for any purpose other than for business research, nor shall any such payments in excess of $20,000 annually be used to reduce the business-research budget otherwise provided at such institutions below the average of those for the 3 fiscal years immediately preceding the enactment of the bill.

To enable the Secretary of Commerce to carry out the terms of the bill, there is authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, a sum not to exceed 4 percent of the total appropriation made for such year under the bill, or $50,000, whichever is the larger amount.

Mr. President, small-business men number about 4,000,000, and provide employment for approximately 15,000,000 people. They have been handicapped by a lack of facilities for research essential to their efficient operation, and, in fact, their very existence. Business-research stations, set up with the aid of Federal funds in those States where there is a real interest in such work, will be able to collect, study, and make recommendations concerning problems of the small-business man who is unable to give any time or money to such efforts himself.

Working through State and local trade associations and trade papers, as well as directly through their own reports, these business stations will have under this measure facilities and support not now available.

To a considerable extent at the present time, schools of business administration on a collegiate level have directed their time and effort to the training of young men and young women who expect to go into some phase of local business life. This training has been based upon the experience of the teachers and their individual contact with business and business leaders in the State. If the bill is enacted into law, and funds are made available for the establishment of research stations, not only will more facts of a local and practical character be made available to these young men and women, but the State, through its business-research stations, will be able to serve those who are already in business and who need information which is not now available to them.

The businessmen of this Nation desire to operate their own affairs in such a way that their businesses will benefit customers as well as themselves. It is my opinion that this piece of proposed legislation will, in the long run, place small business, particularly, on a more stable basis, place competition on a higher level, produce more continuous employment, and give the ultimate consumer a greater variety of goods and services for every dollar of income.

Mr. President, that is all I have to say at this time. I give notice that I shall move to take the bill up at the close of the call of the calendar.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I merely wish to say, as a member of the committee which sat with the Senator from Texas and heard the testimony on the bill, that I agree with what the Senator has said as to the importance of the measure. I know the Senator from Texas has been diligent in his efforts to get the bill before the Senate, and I certainly hope he will have an early opportunity when he can move to take it up, and give the Senate an opportunity to consider and pass upon it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

Mr. SHEPPARD subsequently said: Mr. President, since I gave notice that I would endeavor to call up Senate bill 1740, I have looked further into the situation and do not feel I can make much headway by endeavoring to call it up this afternoon. I shall therefore postpone my effort until a later day and more favorable opportunity.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 1850. An act to aid the States and Territories in making provisions for the retirement of employees of the land-grant colleges;

S. 2867. An act to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to transfer by quitclaim deed to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. for right-of-way purposes a small strip of land at Veterans' Administration facility, Coatesville, Pa.;

S. 2868. An act to facilitate the procurement of aircraft for the national defense; and

S. 2876. An act to amend the Annual and Sick Leave Acts of March 14, 1936.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 1036) to authorize the purchase of certain lands adjacent to the Turtle Mountain Indian Agency in the State of North Dakota, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma, Mr. HILL, and Mr. BURDICK were appointed managers on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8438) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 8438) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REGULATION OF EQUIPMENT ON NAVIGABLE WATERS

The bill (S. 2259) to amend laws for preventing collisions of vessels, to regulate equipment of certain motorboats on the navigable waters of the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, this bill came from the Committee on Commerce last June, and I have been objecting to its consideration on each call of the calendar. It deals with the operation of motorboats throughout the United States. Since June I have been in conference with the Department of Commerce with respect to a series of amendments, and I am happy to say we are now in complete agreement on amendments, and I think that by the time of the next call of the calendar I shall be able to present a complete agreement for the consideration of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

JOINT RESOLUTIONS AND BILLS PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 145) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to old-age assistance, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over! Over!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1296) to amend paragraphs (b), (c), and (d) of section 6 of the District of Columbia Traffic Act, 1925, as amended by the acts of July 3, 1926, and February 27, 1931, and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2585) to reimburse the cotton cooperative associations for losses occasioned by the Federal Farm Board's stabilization operations, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 84) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States for a referendum on war was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 140) proposing an amendment to the Constitution relating to the power of the Congress to declare war was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2687) to establish a Circuit Court of Appeals for Patents was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 409) to protect American labor and stimulate the employment of American citizens on American jobs was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over! Over!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 5643) to invest the circuit courts of appeals of the United States with original and exclusive jurisdiction to review the order of detention of any alien ordered deported from the United States whose deportation or departure from the United States otherwise is not effectuated within 90 days after the date the warrant of deportation shall have become final; to authorize such detention orders in certain cases; to provide places for such detention; and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over! Over!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2573) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended; for the purpose of regulating interstate and foreign commerce in rice and providing for the orderly marketing of rice at fair prices in interstate and foreign commerce was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6039) to amend laws for preventing collisions of vessels; to regulate equipment of certain motorboats on navigable waters of the United States, and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 101) defining and classifying gratuity expenditures allowable as offsets in favor of the United States and against the Five Civilized Nations or Tribes of Indians was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the subject connected with this measure is before the special committee of which the Senator from Texas is chairman, and his committee has had 2 or 3 days' hearings, and will be ready to report on the joint resolution within a short time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being heard, the joint resolution will be passed over.

OPPRESSIVE LABOR PRACTICES

The bill (S. 1970) to eliminate certain oppressive labor practices affecting interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, with respect to Senate bill 1970, which was reached on the calendar a few moments ago, inadvertently objection was made. I thought it was an Indian bill. I have no objection to its consideration; but I understand from the Senator from Wisconsin that perhaps it should not be taken up under the unanimous-consent agreement, with the limited period available for consideration.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I appreciate the statement of the Senator from Utah; but this is an important measure, and will require considerable debate. I do not think it can be disposed of during consideration of bills on the calendar by unanimous consent.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2575) to provide pensions, compensating retirement pay, and hospital benefits for certain Reserve officers of the Army of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2830) to provide for the registration of aliens, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ADAMS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6901) granting increase of pensions to certain widows of veterans of the Civil War, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2510) to promote the general welfare through the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public kindergarten or kindergarten and nursery-school education was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2103) to repeal the act entitled "An act to conserve and develop Indian lands and resources; to extend to Indians the right to form business and other organizations; to establish a credit system for Indians; to grant certain rights of home rule to Indians; to provide for vocational education for Indians; and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1934, and the act of June 15, 1935, supplementary thereto was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 367) to authorize the Secretaries of War and of the Navy to assist the governments of American republics to increase their military and naval establishments and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION TO RECESS APPOINTEES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2773), to authorize the payment of compensation to recess appointees in certain cases, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments on page 2, line 4, after the word "office", to insert "other than the nomination of a person appointed during the preceding recess of the Senate," and at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1761 of the Revised Statutes be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 1761. No money shall be paid from the Treasury, as salary, to any person appointed during the recess of the Senate to fill a vacancy in any existing office, if the vacancy existed while the Senate was in session and was by law required to be filled by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, until such appointee has been confirmed by the Senate. The provisions of this section shall not apply (a) if the vacancy arose within 30 days prior to the termination of the session of the Senate; or (b) if, at the time of the termination of the session of the Senate, a nomination for such office, other than the nomination of a person appointed during the preceding recess of the Senate, was pending before the Senate for its advice and consent; or (c) if a nomination for such office was rejected by the Senate within 30 days prior to the termination of the session and a person other than the one whose nomination was rejected thereafter receives a recess commission: Provided, That a nomination to fill such vacancy under (a), (b), or (c) hereof, shall be submitted to the Senate not later than 40 days after the commencement of the next succeeding session of the Senate."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXEMPTION OF CERTAIN INDIANS FROM PROVISIONS OF ACT OF JUNE 18, 1934

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from Utah, under misapprehension, objected to Senate bill 2103 when it was reached on the calendar.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I misconceived the number.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 2103, Calendar No. 1094, which was previously passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2103) to repeal the act entitled "An act to conserve and develop Indian lands and resources; to extend to Indians the right to form business and other organizations; to establish a credit system for Indians; to grant certain rights of home rule to Indians; to provide for vocational education for Indians; and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1934, and the act of June 15, 1935, supplementary thereto, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That section 13 of the act entitled "An act to conserve and develop Indian lands and resources; to extend to Indians the right to form business and other organizations; to establish a credit system for Indians; to grant certain rights of home rule to Indians; to provide for vocational education for Indians; and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1934, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"None of the provisions of this act shall apply to (1) any Indian tribe on the Standing Rock Reservation located in the States of North and South Dakota; (2) the Pine Ridge Sioux Tribe of Indians of the State of South Dakota; (3) the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe of Indians of the State of South Dakota; (4) the Yankton Sioux Tribe of Indians of the Rosebud Agency of the State of South Dakota; (5) any Indian on any reservation or any Indian tribe or group, located in the State of Nevada; (6) the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians located in the State of North Carolina; (7) any Indian tribe, band, or group located in the State of California; (8) any Indian or Indian tribe on the Colorado River Indian Reservation of the State of Arizona; or (9) the Navajo Tribe located in the State of New Mexico."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to exempt certain Indians and Indian tribes from the provisions of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984), as amended."

KINGS CANYON NATIONAL PARK, CALIF.

The bill (H. R. 3794) to establish the King's Canyon National Park, Calif., to transfer thereto the lands now included in the General Grant National Park, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I desire to make a statement against this bill. Under the unanimous consent agreement I believe I will not have sufficient time to speak against the bill. I need more than 5 minutes.

Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. How much time in all do I have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 5 minutes on the bill, and 5 minutes on any amendment to the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not think 5 minutes will be sufficient time for me to express my opposition to the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Could not the Senator from Nevada by unanimous consent speak longer than 5 minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without question, by unanimous consent, he could speak longer than that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Nevada be permitted to make his statement on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, then I will not raise any objection to taking up the bill.

I think the introduction of this bill and the stage it has reached in the Senate is one of the most remarkable things I have known to happen in connection with any legislation, and I have known of a great many peculiar things since I have been here. The Legislature of the State of California, after long hearings were had on the proposed establishment of the Kings Canyon National Park, voted on the subject, and in the State senate the vote against the measure was unanimous, except for two votes. The lower house of the legislature voted against it by a 2 to 1 vote.

The Farm Bureau of California acted on this matter and opposed the creation of this park. Seventy-two organizations in the State of California opposed the creation of this park. There is no doubt in my mind that this proposed legislation so far is solely the result of the domination of one man, standing against the Legislature of California, against the chambers of commerce of California, against the farm bureau, against the conservation societies. I know there is no one here who longs to see the bill pass. All long to get it out of the way because it is embarrassing to have the measure pending.

Mr. President, today there are in California over 2,000,000 acres in national parks. There is the great Sequoia National Park on one side of this proposed Kings Canyon National Park, and then there is the Yosemite National Park on the other side of it. Yet, in spite of that, it is proposed now to add 600,000 acres more lying between these two great national parks.

Nearly all the summits of the Sierra Nevada Mountains of California are today in national parks. Let it be understood that I believe in those watersheds being conserved. I believe also in having the timber conserved. But the 600,000 acres which are now proposed to be put in a national park are already, and have for many years been, under the control of the Forest Service. So far as I have observed, the Forest Service is as great a conservation organization as we have in the Government. It has done more to preserve the forests on the watersheds than has any other agency. It has done more toward scientific reforestation than the Park Service could possibly do, because the Park Service does not contain a scientific organization capable of handling the problem.

We have today 19,000,000 acres in national parks in the United States. Their area has been increased by over 1,000,000 acres in the past year, and there is a plan laid out for the future whereby the national parks will be increased to a far greater extent.

I feel, however, that the legislature of a State should have some voice in deciding whether or not the land in that State should be withdrawn from use. It is getting so that now in the Western States there is not enough land which may go into private ownership to raise sufficient taxes to support a State. Eighty-seven percent of the land in the State of Nevada is Government owned and controlled. Yet additional land is constantly being withdrawn from private acquisition.

In the southern part of my State 2,400 square miles have been taken and made into what is called a recreation area under the Park Service. They are now asking for appropriations to carry out that recreation scheme. In Nevada only about a year ago an area 52 miles square, taking in a whole mountain range, was withdrawn for park purposes. That is the only range in that section on which a farmer can graze his cattle. That is now being withdrawn from use or acquisition. The Government has taken it all.

The number of acres set aside for the Indians in my State is being increased. The Government has gone with cash money and bought up miles and miles of private ranches and turned them over to the Indians. That land is taken out of taxation.

Outside the forests of my State, all the land is today placed under the Taylor Grazing Act. That land is not subject to homesteading. It is not subject to acquisition under any law whatever except the mining law. It is out of use; it is out of private possession, out of taxation forever.

I see the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] sitting here. I am satisfied that three-fourths of the State of Arizona has been subjected to every character of withdrawal, so that today it is not subject to taxation at all.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Nevada is quite correct; that is to say, nearly two-thirds of the area of Arizona is withdrawn from the people and therefore, of course, withdrawn from taxation. If additional withdrawals are to take place in Arizona, it may become impossible to maintain the county governments, and it might become extremely difficult to maintain a State government. I cite for example two counties in Arizona. The Federal Government now controls 88.9 percent of the total acreage of Coconino County and 89 percent of the total acreage of Navajo County.

I know nothing of the pending bill, and I ask, Are we to understand that the Legislature of the State of California is opposed to the withdrawal?

Mr. PITTMAN. Absolutely; by an almost unanimous vote in the State senate, with the exception of two votes, and by a vote of 2 to 1 in the house, after long hearings.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator further indulge me?

Mr. PITTMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. ASHURST. It has long been my policy—from which I have never deviated—not to vote for the creation of any reserve or the withdrawal of any land from the people unless and until the board of supervisors of the county in which the land is located and the eligible State land board or the legislature of the State petitioned Congress to make the withdrawal.

Some 2 years ago I was requested to assist in securing the creation of what was to be known as the Petrified Forest National Park in Arizona; but I refused to support the bill unless and until the Arizona State Land Board and the supervisors of the counties in which the land lies urged the creation of the park.

Will the Senator further yield to me?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, power is the headiest wine known to the human race. We may explore the pages of history, but it is difficult to find in the annals of the human race any man in any nation at any time who, clothed with all power, did other than exercise that power oppressively. I know of no instance of an official of this Government or any other government who, being given absolute and arbitrary power, used it wisely.

In the West such reserves have been created, frequently by the ipse dixit of a department head or a bureau chief, and frequently by pressure from local civic authorities, who were told, "If you will have this or that half-million acres created into a park or other reserve, we will obtain for you $1,000,000 a year from Uncle Sam's Treasury to maintain the withdrawal."

This decade is not a resisting one when it comes to taking money out of the Public Treasury. I commend the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] because he has—with success on many occasions—tried to see to it that such vast tracts of land shall be reserved to the people when they are not needed for public purposes.

Under the law of 1906 the President is authorized to create national monuments. It was expected that there might be a rock, a tree, some freak of nature, some pinnacle of marvelous beauty embracing a few acres or a square mile, which might under that law be set aside as a national monument. But, Mr. President, under the heady wine of power, not only this administration, but preceding ones as well, have set apart and withdrawn hundreds of square miles as national monuments. Happily enough—I do not know when or how—Congress at some lucid moment reserved to itself the right to create a national park, and Congress has never given to any department head or bureau chief the power to create a national park. That is a happy circumstance. For once Congress retained the reins of power. National monuments, however, may be created by Executive power and thus a thousand square miles, forsooth, may be withdrawn from the people for one national monument by a stroke of the pen.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. ADAMS. It seems to me the Senator from Arizona is somewhat lacking in information as to the situation. This is not a transfer from private ownership to public ownership. It is a transfer from a forest reserve already established over to the national park. Less than 1 percent of the land involved is in private ownership. Both Senators from California have indicated that they favor the creation of the park.

Mr. ASHURST. I have not read the pending bill and know nothing of it except what I have just learned from the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. I am speaking generally of the habit of departments in creating such reserves. However, if the pending bill proposes to withdraw lands from the State of California, and the Legislature of California is opposed to the bill, I would not support it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the land involved is forest land. It has been in a forest reserve for many, many years. It lies between the Yosemite National Park and the Sequoia National Park. It has been the best recreation site in California. So far as I know, it has been the best recreation site in the United States, and yet that recreation was had with conservation. A man could take his family and a tent and motor up to any little lake or stream in that forest and camp and fish. He would not be permitted to do that in a national park.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not criticize such regulations. The national parks were intended to preserve certain phenomena of nature, such as the geysers which spout at regular intervals in Yellowstone National Park. It is conceivable that they might be injured or destroyed. That is absolute conservation.

One may not camp in Yellowstone National Park. He must go to one of the miserable concessionaires and live with him. He may not fish in a national park without employing a concessionaire to take him out in a boat. If he desires to get on a horse and ride up to the high streams to camp and fish, he is not permitted to do so. I think that is all probably very proper.

However, when we are speaking of recreation and of opportunities for the people to get out into the wilds, there is no comparison between the forest reserves and the park system. The forest reserves have been preserved as wild areas, where any American citizen may go in his automobile with his tent and fish, or even hunt, or live. That may not be done in a national park.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Under proper regulations he may also graze his livestock on the national forests, but he may not do so in a national park.

Mr. PITTMAN. The difference between a national park and a forest reserve is that a national park is conserved without use, except for the tourists to look at, whereas the national forests are preserved under conservation for the purpose of conserving the forests by reforestation and fire prevention, allowing the largest possible use by our people consistent with conservation.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I may be a little thin-skinned or sensitive on this subject. I hope not; but I have had some distressing experiences.

More than 20 years ago it occurred to me that the Grand Canyon in Arizona ought to be a national park. I need not now enter upon any eulogy of the gorgeous majesty of the Grand Canyon. Many artists in words have dipped their pen into the ink of temerity with a view of depicting the colors of the Grand Canyon. I make no attempt to do so, further than to say that I did believe that the Grand Canyon should be a national park. I sought the counsel and aid of an eminent lawyer who subsequently went to the Supreme Court of the United States and there served with great distinction. We drew a bill to create such national park, and the bill had the approval of the State of Arizona. We provided in the bill that although the lands might become a national park, all persons who had established or acquired homestead rights, mining rights, or any other rights in the proposed park should not be disturbed, but should enjoy such rights and be protected therein.

Under the bill creating the Grand Canyon National Park, all claims, locations, and entries, of whatsoever nature, which were at that time valid and subsisting were not to be disturbed. Some of the paragraphs of that bill, which became the law and is now the law, are as follows:

SEC. 4. That nothing herein contained shall affect any valid existing claim, location, or entry under the land laws of the United States, whether for homestead, mineral, right-of-way, or any other purpose whatsoever, or shall affect the rights of any such claimant, locator, or entryman to the full use and enjoyment of his land and nothing herein contained shall affect, diminish, or impair the right and authority of the county of Coconino, in the State of Arizona, to levy and collect tolls for the passage of livestock over and upon the Bright Angel Toll Road and Trail, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to negotiate with the said county of Coconino for the purchase of said Bright Angel Toll Road and Trail and all rights therein, and report to Congress at as early a date as possible the terms upon which the property can be procured.

SEC. 5. That whenever consistent with the primary purposes of said park the act of February 15, 1901, applicable to the locations of rights-of-way in certain national parks and the national forests for irrigation and other purposes, and subsequent acts shall be and remain applicable to the lands included within the park. The Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion and upon such conditions as he may deem proper, grant easements or rights-of-way for railroads upon or across the park.

SEC. 6. That whenever consistent with the primary purposes of said park, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, under general regulations to be prescribed by him, to permit the prospecting, development, and utilization of the mineral resources of said park upon such terms and for specified periods, or otherwise, as he may deem to be for the best interests of the United States.

SEC. 7. That, whenever consistent with the primary purposes of said park, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to permit the utilization of areas therein which may be necessary for the development and maintenance of a Government reclamation project.

SEC. 8. That where privately owned lands within the said park lie within 300 feet of the rim of the Grand Canyon no building, tent, fence, or other structure shall be erected on the park lands lying between said privately owned lands and the rim.

Notwithstanding this law, the Interior Department has recently instituted a suit, under the power of eminent domain, to try to condemn some of the lands in private ownership in the Grand Canyon National Park. This lawsuit has aroused the resentment, the just resentment, of many persons in northern Arizona.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I understand an effort was made a short time ago to set aside as a national monument an area in my State larger than the State of Rhode Island.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct.

Mr. KING. I have interposed objection to it. I do not know what the result may be. I think a measure should be enacted to prevent lands in the public domain being set apart for monuments, parks, or reserves without an act of Congress.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think I thoroughly agree with what the Senator has said. I have announced two or three times that I intended to introduce a bill of that kind. One would not think it was necessary, however, to introduce such a bill.

Mr. KING. I would not.

Mr. PITTMAN. One would have an idea that Senators representing States here would have some respect for other States and that they would give adequate consideration to some of their interests. It is very difficult, of course, for a Senator coming from a State where all the land is held in private ownership, and has been probably from the beginning of our Government, to understand the situation in the section where the public lands are located.

I repeat that with 87 percent of the area of my State public land, the support of State and local governments becomes a serious matter. There have already been withdrawn large areas for forest reserves, large areas for Indian reservations; there were taken 2,400 square miles for a recreation area in the southern part of the State; and, going a little farther north, there was taken a tract of land 52 miles square—think of that—as large, probably, as the State of Rhode Island. With a pencil it was marked on the map as a reserve for mountain sheep. Yet that high mountain land in the southern part of the State, where it is hot and dry, is the only range land available to small farmers living around that mountain. But it is reserved forever now by the great Department of the Interior. Right across the valley from this 52 miles square is a forest reserve that has been there for years, covering almost a great mountain range. That is a game reserve which will take care of all the mountain sheep and all the other game that may be found in southern Nevada.

I say Senators do not understand the situation, and, therefore, we of the West should have some expression with regard to what should be done with the lands in our States.

Let me read a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of California. It is very brief and was adopted unanimously, I believe, except for two votes in the California Senate. The resolution is as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 2

Relative to the memorialization of the President and the Congress of the United States for the protection, use, and development of the natural resources of the State of California

Whereas nature has bestowed upon the State of California a priceless heritage of natural resources of soil, water, forests, minerals, forage, game animals, birds, fish, and scenic and recreational attractions; and

Whereas these natural resources are vital to the permanence and future growth and prosperity of the basic industries of the State, and to the welfare and happiness of its citizens; and

Whereas the protection and wise use of our valuable natural resources is the responsibility of the Federal and State Governments, and the civic duty of all our people; and

Whereas large areas of California's important watersheds, forests, grazing and mineral lands, fishing streams and lakes, wildlife ranges, free public playgrounds, and scenic features are found within the national forests in the State; and

Whereas there is pending national legislation which will create a new national park in the Middle and South Fork of Kings River that will remove large water and other natural resources from development and use by adjacent dependent communities; and

Whereas these national-forest resources are protected and managed for the benefit of all our citizens and the permanence of our industries and are open at all times to full utilization and economic development: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and the Assembly of the State of California jointly, That the State of California, through its legislature, hereby memorializes and petitions the President and the Congress of the United States that all national-forest lands in the Middle and South Fork of Kings River and their valuable natural resources be permanently retained in national-forest status under the protection and administration of the Forest Service,

United States Department of Agriculture, where they will be perpetually open, as needed, to all measures, developments, and activities necessary for the full use, regulation, and control of the land and the resources thereof; and be it further

Provided, That this resolution is not to be construed as any criticism of the National Park Service or as evidence of any lack of appreciation of the aid given this State by the Federal Government in respect to flood control and the construction of irrigation dams; and be it further

Provided, That this petition is not to be interpreted as manifesting a lack of sympathy on the part of this legislature with the basic objective of the Federal Government to provide for the perpetual protection of national-forest lands in the Middle and South Fork of Kings River as a protected wilderness for the benefit and enjoyment of future generations; and be it further

Resolved, That the State of California, through its legislature, hereby memorializes and petitions the President and the Congress of the United States that any contemplated further extension to Yosemite National Park be deferred until some plan is evolved to compensate adequately the counties for the resulting loss of tax revenue; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate is hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and to Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives and to the Secretary of Agriculture and the Chief of the Forest Service.

I think that explains the situation as clearly as anything could.

In addition to that there is the resolution adopted by the Farm Bureau Federation of California, which I ask leave to have printed at this point in my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution referred to is as follows:

"Whereas for a number of years the Department of the Interior has had an announced policy calling for the creation of a new national park in California to be known as the Kings River Canyon National Park; and

"Whereas this proposed national park embraces some 600,000 acres of territory in this State, having within its boundaries resources of high economic value to the future development of the State; and

"Whereas the territory in question is now under the administration of the United States Forest Service, whose management and multiple use policy guarantees the availability of these resources for future economic development of the State, as well as full recreational use; and

"Whereas many of the important economic resources in question would be locked up and future development prohibited under national-park policy and administration; and

"Whereas the United States Forest Service has submitted a development plan for the area, which is highly commendable, which guarantees proper recreational development and scenic safeguard; and

"Whereas we are informed that a general expansion program of national parks in California is contemplated by the Department of the Interior; and

"Whereas there are now within this State 2,905,269 acres of national parks and national monuments yielding no revenue to the State, many of these units (notably Lassen Volcanic National Park) being underfinanced and underdeveloped for public use; and

"Whereas it is the belief of this body that the interests of the State can best be served if Kings River Canyon area remain under the management of the United States Forest Service; and

"Whereas it is the belief of the Fresno County Farm Bureau that 'within the forested regions of California, the extension of present boundaries of national parks, or the establishment of new national parks should be made only when such extension or establishment shall be for the best national interests and in accordance with the best social and economic development of the State in its broadest aspects': Now, therefore, be it Resolved, That this body earnestly request the board of directors of the California Farm Bureau Federation to oppose the creation of the proposed Kings River National Park."

Motion to adopt by California Farm Bureau Federation carried, May 18, 1938.

We understand that the Army engineers and the Reclamation Service have completed reports concerning the possibility of building the Pine Flat Dam.

May we recommend that copies of each of these reports be made available to interested and affected groups, and that no action be taken looking to the construction of the Pine Flat Dam until water users in the area have had full opportunity to study the reports and express their opinions.

Respectfully submitted.

CALIFORNIA FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
By ALEX. JOHNSON.

Mr. PITTMAN. Seventy-two other organizations have appeared and their resolutions are in the hearings.

Mr. President, I realize that this is a futile attempt on my part so far as this bill is concerned, but the question is of too great importance to allow it to drift on without protest. It looks as though everybody is ashamed to look at or to mention this bill. I even have dear friends who are anxious that it go through in a hurry so that they may forget it, urge me to let it pass, and I want to help them all I can.

I wish to say again that the legislature of my own State of Nevada supported the resolution of the legislature of the State of California and have petitioned their Representatives in Congress to oppose this bill, and I am opposing it, hopelessly I know.

Mr. KING. Why?

Mr. PITTMAN. I cannot say why. I stated why once in the Burlew hearings, and my reason now is the same.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, just a word or two. This bill received extensive hearings in the Public Lands Committee of the other House. It was passed there with certain amendments. It came before the Public Lands Committee of the Senate. A subcommittee was appointed which held extensive hearings. The report of the subcommittee approving the passage of the bill appears in the report on the bill, and I think, in order to save time, I will ask that the report of the subcommittee be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

JULY 28, 1939.

HON. ALVA B. ADAMS,
Chairman, Committee on Public Lands and Surveys,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The subcommittee appointed by the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys to study an act (H. R. 3794) to establish the Kings Canyon National Park, Calif., to transfer thereto the lands now included in the General Grant National Park, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The purpose of the act, H. R. 3794, is to conserve permanently in its natural condition, as a national park for the benefit and enjoyment of the people, one of the most famous scenic areas in the United States. The bill would abolish the General Grant National Park and would add it, to be known as the General Grant Grove Section, to the new national park, which would be known as the Kings Canyon National Park. All of the public lands to comprise the new park, with exception of the General Grant National Park, would be transferred from the Sierra and Sequoia National Forests. The total area of the proposed park is 454,600 acres, of which 5,763 acres are privately owned. The major portion of the privately owned lands comprise the Redwood Mountain Grove of giant sequoias, the finest large grove remaining in private ownership, which the bill would authorize for addition to the park. This proposed legislation has been approved by the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior.

Timber, mineral, and grazing resources of the Kings Canyon wilderness are negligible. The average annual number of livestock grazing within the proposed park during the last 5 years is only 985 cattle and horses and 300 sheep, allotted to 12 permittees. The act protects these privileges and provides for the continuation of these permits during the lives of the present permittees. The Commissioner of the United States Bureau of Reclamation and the Chief of Army Engineers have both issued written statements giving assurance that the most feasible water-storage and power-development sites along the Kings River are outside of the proposed park and that they have no plans for developments within the proposed park area.

The Chief Forester of the United States Forest Service, now administering these public lands, has testified that their primary value is for recreation and that they are of national-park caliber. The State of California, at a cost of millions of dollars, has built a highway into the canyon of the South Fork of Kings River, converting what has been an inaccessible wilderness into a resort for tens of thousands of visitors. It is urgent that Congress establish a permanent policy for administration of this region before the new highway is opened to traffic this summer.

The creation of the park is supported by almost every newspaper of California, by almost every organization and group that has considered it, and by almost all the voters.

Very truly yours,

PAT McCARRAN, Chairman.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the bill has the approval both of the Interior Department and of the Department of Agriculture. The subcommittee report points out one thing which should be of interest to the Senate. It gives the total area involved and then states:

Timber, mineral, and grazing resources of the Kings Canyon wilderness are negligible. The average annual number of livestock grazing within the proposed park during the last 5 years is only 985 cattle and horses and 300 sheep, allotted to 12 permittees. The act protects these privileges and provides for the continuation of these permits during the lives of the present permittees.

I have a very general accord with the purposes and views of the Senator from Nevada, but I think the particular bill, if passed, would tend to preserve for public recreational purposes, under the administration of the park authorities, one of the finest scenic areas of the country. The passage of the bill would not jeopardize power development; it would not involve the taking away of grazing or other privileges.

I am relying, as did the committee in reporting the bill favorably, upon the report of the subcommittee and upon the favorable recommendations of both the Interior Department and the Forestry Service, supplemented by the favorable attitude of the two Senators from the State of California, whose judgment would largely conclude my opinion.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator what would happen to this land or what would happen to its scenic value if this bill were not passed?

Mr. ADAMS. The scenic features of it are in the forest reserve, and nothing would happen to them except that they would not be available in the same way that they would be available under the administration of the Park Service. In other words, the Park Service develops scenic resources; the Forestry Service does not make the same character of development.

Mr. LODGE. Is this land at the present time in danger of being despoiled or wasted or damaged?

Mr. ADAMS. I think not. It is under the forest administration. The tract is large, embracing, as I recall, 454,000 acres, and including 5,763 acres which are privately owned and which contain an extensive growth of giant sequoias. Those trees may be cut and destroyed if something is not done. That, in acreage, is a minor part. In scenic value, it is a major part.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the tract of land in the State of California particularly described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the summit of Junction Peak, being a point on the present north boundary of Sequoia National Park, also a point on the Tulare and Inyo County line; thence westerly along said north boundary of said park to the crest of the hydrographic divide between Boulder Creek and Sugarloaf Creek; thence in a northerly direction along the crest of the hydrographic divide between Boulder Creek and Sugarloaf Creek to the intersection of said divide with the section line between sections 3 and 4 of township 14 south, range 30 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian; thence northerly along the section line between said sections 3 and 4 and between sections 33 and 34, and sections 27 and 28 of township 13 south, range 30 east, to the northwest corner of southwest quarter of section 27; thence northwesterly along the ridge immediately adjacent to and lying northeast from the headwaters of the east fork of Lightning Creek to the intersection of said ridge with the section line between sections 21 and 28, township 13 south, range 30 east, which point lies on the said section line three-quarters of a mile more or less westerly from the northeast corner of said section 28; thence in a northerly direction across the easterly branch of the east fork of Lightning Creek at Summit Meadow to the ridge north of said creek branch; thence northeasterly along said ridge to Lookout Peak; thence in a northeasterly direction along the ridge from said peak, being also the crest of the hydrographic divide between Sheep Creek and Lightning Creek to the intersection of said ridge with the line between sections 15 and 22, township 13 south, range 30 east, which point lies one-quarter of a mile more or less westerly of the northeast corner of said section 22; thence easterly along said section line to the corner of sections 14, 15, 22, and 23; thence north along the line between sections 14 and 15 to the southwest corner of the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 14; thence east to the southeast corner of the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of the said section; thence south to the southwest corner of the northeast quarter of the said section; thence east to the southeast corner of the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of the said section; thence south to the southwest corner of the southeast quarter of the said section; thence east to the northeast corner of the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of the said section; thence south to the southwest corner of section 13; thence east on the line between sections 13 and 24 to the southeast corner of section 13; thence south to southwest corner of the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 19, township 13 south, range 31 east; thence east along the north latitudinal one-sixteenth section line of sections 19, 20, and 21 to the southeast corner of the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of said section 21; thence north to the quarter section corner of sections 16 and 21; thence east along the line between sections 16 and 21 to the southeast corner of said section 16; thence north along the section line to the quarter section

Mountain, Cardinal Mountain, Striped Mountain, Mount Perkins, Colosseum Mountain, Mount Baxter, Diamond Peak, Black Mountain, Dragon Peak, Mount Bixford, Mount Gould, University Peak, Mount Bradley, and Mount Keith to the summit of Junction Peak, being the point of beginning; is hereby reserved and withdrawn from settlement, occupancy, or disposal under the laws of the United States and dedicated and set apart as a public park, to be known as the Kings Canyon National Park, for the benefit and enjoyment of the people: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to affect or abridge any right acquired by any citizen of the United States in the above-described area: And provided further, That no grazing permits heretofore issued and in effect on January 15, 1939, affecting the area described in this section, for whose renewal an application is made before the date of expiration, shall be affected by this act, except that they shall be subject to such terms and conditions to insure protection of the lands and for other purposes as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Sec. 2. That the General Grant National Park is hereby abolished, and the west half of section 33, township 13 south, range 28 east, and west half of section 4, all of section 8 and the northwest quarter of section 9, township 14 south, range 28 east, Mount Diablo meridian, California, together with the lands formerly within the General Grant National Park, Calif., and particularly described as follows, to wit: All of sections 31 and 32, township 13 south, range 28 east, and sections 5 and 6, township 14 south, range 28 east, of the same meridian, are, subject to valid existing rights, hereby added to and made a part of the Kings Canyon National Park and such lands shall be known as the General Grant grove section of the said park. The General Grant grove section of the Kings Canyon National Park may, by proclamation of the President, be extended to include the following described lands, to wit: Section 9, south half, section 10, southwest quarter, and that part of the east half south of Generals Highway; section 11, that part south of Generals Highway; section 13, that part south of Generals Highway; section 14, that part south of Generals Highway, section 15, east half, northwest quarter, and the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter, section 21, southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, and the east half of the southeast quarter; section 22, east half, east half of the northwest quarter, southwest quarter of the northwest quarter and southwest quarter; section 23; section 24, that part south of Generals Highway, sections 25 and 26; section 27, east half, northwest quarter, and that part of the southwest quarter north and east of the crest of Redwood Mountain; section 34, that part east of the crest of Redwood Mountain; sections 35 and 36, township 14 south, range 28 east; all of sections 1 and 2; section 3, that part east of the crest of Redwood Mountain; section 11, that part east and north of the crest of Redwood Mountain; all of section 12; section 13, that part north of the Sequoia National Park boundary, township 15 south, range 28 east, Mount Diablo meridian, which shall be subject to all laws, rules, and regulations applicable to the said park. Such extension of the General Grant grove section of the said park shall not interfere with the movement of stock and vehicular traffic without charge, under general regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, to and from national forest lands on either side of the said park extension. The Kings Canyon National Park shall receive and use all moneys heretofore or hereafter appropriated for General Grant National Park.

Sec. 3. That the National Park Service shall, under the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, administer for public recreational purposes the lands withdrawn.

Sec. 4. That any motor-vehicle license issued for Sequoia National Park shall be applicable to Kings Canyon National Park, and vice versa: Provided, That in order to insure the permanent preservation of the wilderness character of the Kings Canyon National Park the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, limit the character and number of privileges that he may grant within the Kings Canyon National Park. No privileges shall be granted for a period in excess of 5 years.

Sec. 5. That the administration, protection, and development of the Kings Canyon National Park shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service, subject to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916 (39 Stat. 535), entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes," as amended.

INVESTIGATION OF ECONOMIC AND INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS IN PUERTO RICO

The Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 18) providing for an investigation of economic and industrial conditions in Puerto Rico, which had been reported from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the words "investigation of", to strike out "economic" and insert "the social, economic", and in line 8, after the words "Puerto Rico", to strike out "with a particular view to determining" and insert "and to determine", so as to make the concurrent resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That a special joint committee of three Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation of the social, economic, and industrial conditions in Puerto Rico, and to determine the effect upon Puerto Rico of the Sugar Act of 1937, the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, and foreign-trade agreements entered into pursuant to the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act of 1934. The special joint committee shall select a chairman from among its members, and shall report to the Congress at the earliest practicable time the results of its study and investigation, together with its recommendations.

For the purposes of this resolution the special joint committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-sixth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpoena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $5,000, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

The amendments were agreed to.

The concurrent resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

RESOLUTION AND BILL PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 168) providing for an investigation of the immigration of aliens into the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Let the resolution go over.

RELIEF OF FORMER DISBURSING OFFICERS FOR CIVIL WORKS ADMINISTRATION

The bill (H. R. 7050) for the relief of certain former disbursing officers for the Civil Works Administration was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN SCHOOL BUILDINGS IN MONTANA

The bill (S. 1450) to provide funds for cooperation with school district No. 13, Froid, Mont., for extension of public-school buildings to be available to Indian children was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $30,000 for the purpose of cooperating with school district No. 13, Froid, Mont., for the extension and improvement of public-school buildings: Provided, That the expenditure of any money so appropriated shall be subject to the condition that the schools maintained by said district shall be available to all Indian children of the school district on the same terms, except as to payment of tuition, as other children of said school district: Provided further, That plans and specifications for construction, enlargement, or improvement of structures shall be furnished by local or State authorities, without cost to the United States, and upon approval thereof by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, actual work shall proceed under the direction of such local or State officials. Payment for work in place shall be made monthly on vouchers properly certified by local officials of the Indian Service: Provided further, That any amount expended on any project hereunder shall be recouped by the United States within a period of 30 years, commencing with the date of occupancy of the project, through reducing the annual Federal tuition payments for the education of Indian pupils enrolled in public or high schools of the district involved, or by the acceptance of Indian pupils in such schools without cost to the United States; and in computing the amount of recoupment for each project interest at 3 percent per annum shall be included on unrecouped balances: Provided further, That such expenditures shall be subject to such further conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

PUBLIC-SCHOOL FACILITIES, McCURTAIN, OKLA.

The bill (S. 2523) to provide for the construction, extension, equipment, and improvement of public-school facilities at McCurtain, Okla., Haskell County, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $15,000 for the purpose of cooperating with School District No. 37, Haskell County, McCurtain, Okla., for construction, extension, equipment, and improvement of school facilities: Provided, That the expenditure of any moneys so appropriated shall be subject to the condition that the schools maintained by said district shall be available to all the Indian children of the district on the same terms, except as to payment of tuition, as other children of said school district: Provided further, That plans and specifications for construction, enlargement, or improvement of structures shall be furnished by local or State authorities, without cost to the United States, and upon approval thereof by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs actual work shall proceed under the direction of such local or State officials. Payment for work in place shall be made monthly on vouchers properly certified by local officials of the Indian Service: Provided further, That any amount expended on any project hereunder shall be recouped by the United States within a period of 30 years, commencing with the date of occupancy of the project, through reducing the annual Federal tuition payments for the education of Indian pupils enrolled in public or high schools of the district involved, or by the acceptance of Indian pupils in such schools without cost to the United States, and in computing the amount of recoupment for each project interest at 3 percent per annum shall be included on unrecouped balances.

PUBLIC SCHOOL BUILDINGS, UTAH COUNTY, UTAH

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1671) to provide for the construction, extension, and improvement of public-school buildings in Uintah County, Utah, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, after the word "hereby" to insert "authorized to be," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $150,000 for the purpose of cooperating with the Uintah County School District, Utah, for extension and improvement of school buildings: Provided, That the expenditure of any moneys so appropriated shall be subject to the condition that the schools maintained by said district shall be available to all the Indian children of the district on the same terms, except as to payment of tuition, as other children of said school district: Provided further, That plans and specifications for construction, enlargement, or improvement of structures shall be furnished by local or State authorities, without cost to the United States, and upon approval thereof by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs actual work shall proceed under the direction of such local or State officials. Payment for work in place shall be made monthly on vouchers properly certified by local officials of the Indian Service: Provided further, That any amount expended on any project hereunder shall be recouped by the United States within a period of 30 years, commencing with the date of occupancy of the project, through reducing the annual Federal tuition payments for the education of Indian pupils enrolled in public or high schools of the district involved, or by the acceptance of Indian pupils in such schools without cost to the United States, and in computing the amount of recoupment for each project interest at 3 percent per annum shall be included on unrecouped balances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3035) authorizing certain appointments to the United States Military Academy to fill cadetships heretofore created was announced as next in order.

Mr. RUSSELL. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 199) amending Public Resolution No. 112 of the Seventy-fifth Congress and Public Resolution No. 48 of the Seventy-sixth Congress was announced as next in order.

Mr. HATCH. Let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

CITIZENSHIP, ETC., OF CERTAIN PANAMA CANAL ZONE EMPLOYEES

The bill (S. 3130) relating to the citizenship and compensation of certain employees on military construction work in the Panama Canal Zone was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let us have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I am going to ask that the bill go over; and if the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], who reported the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs, were present, I should move that the bill be recommitted.

This bill is properly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals, which has considered that and similar subjects on a number of occasions. In my opinion, the bill was erroneously referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and erroneously reported from that committee.

I shall not make the motion to recommit the bill at this time, in view of the absence of the Senator from North Carolina, but it is my intention at the proper time to make such a motion.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senator from Missouri to Calendar No. 1234, House bill 7941.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. House bill 7941 is similar to the bill which the Senator from Missouri has asked to go over. Without objection, House bill 7941 will go over, as well as Senate bill 3130.

The PRESIDING OFFICER subsequently said: House bill 7941 has already gone over under a previous order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, that bill is not identical with Senate bill 3130. I was under a misapprehension if I asked that House bill 7941 go over, because it simply has to do with Army construction work on the Panama Canal. Therefore, I withdraw my objection and ask unanimous consent that the other bill be returned to Senate bill 3130, if that is an identical bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will consider the House bill, H. R. 7941.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let the bill go over.

Mr. KING. Both bills should go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3016) to amend the act approved February 15, 1929, entitled "An act to permit certain warrant officers to count all active service rendered under temporary appointments as warrant or commissioned officers in the Regular Navy," was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

DISPOSITION OF REMAINS OF NAVY AND MARINE CORPS PERSONNEL, ETC.

The bill (S. 3067) authorizing appropriations to be made for the disposition of the remains of personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps and certain civilian employees of the Navy, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That funds to be expended under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe are hereby authorized to be appropriated as may be necessary from time to time for the funeral expenses of the deceased persons hereinafter specified.

Sec. 2. The words "funeral expenses" as used in this act, and in subsequent acts appropriating funds as herein authorized, shall be construed to include the expenses of, and incident to, the recovery of bodies; cremation, but only on request of the relatives of the deceased; preparation for burial; transportation to the home of the deceased or to a national or other cemetery designated by proper authority; and interment.

Sec. 3. Funeral expenses shall be allowed for—

- (a) Officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps, including those on the retired lists who die while on active duty;
- (b) Members of the Nurse Corps (female) of the Navy, including those on the retired list who die while on active duty;
- (c) Members of the Naval Reserve or Marine Corps Reserve who die while on active or training duty, or while performing authorized travel to or from such duty;
- (d) Accepted applicants for enlistment;
- (e) Civilian employees of the Navy Department or the Naval Establishment who have been ordered away from their homes in the United States to duty outside the continental limits of the United States and who die while on such duty or while performing authorized travel to or from such duty;
- (f) Former enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps who were discharged while patients in hospitals and who remain as patients in such hospitals to the day of their death; and
- (g) Pensioners and destitute patients who die in naval hospitals: Provided, That only the expenses of preparation for burial and interment shall be allowed in disposing of the remains of such pensioners and destitute patients.

Sec. 4. The provisions of this act shall apply in the case of personnel temporarily absent with or without leave when death occurred.

Sec. 5. In any case where funeral expenses authorized by this act are incurred prior to receipt of official authority, reimbursement may be made in the amount allowed by the Navy Department for such services.

Sec. 6. Funds to be expended under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe are hereby authorized to be appropriated as may be necessary from time to time for the purchase and care of cemetery lots; for the care of graves of deceased personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps outside the continental limits of the United States, with which shall be included those in sites not owned by the United States; and for the removal of remains from abandoned cemeteries to naval or national cemeteries or to the homes of the persons deceased, with which shall be included remains interred in isolated graves in the United States and abroad and remains temporarily interred.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 6044) to regulate the number of warrant and commissioned warrant officers in the Marine Corps, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. May we have an explanation of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the bill go over.

DIKE OR DAM ACROSS STANSBURY CREEK, MD.

The bill (S. 2977) authorizing the construction and maintenance of a dike or dam across Stansbury Creek in Baltimore, Md., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Glenn L. Martin Co. and its successors and assigns to construct and maintain a dike or dam across Stansbury Creek at a point suitable to the interests of navigation about five-eighths mile above the mouth of Stansbury Creek in the county of Baltimore in the State of Maryland, in accordance with the provisions of section 9 of the River and Harbor Act of March 3, 1899.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the construction and maintenance of a dike or dam across Stansbury Creek in Baltimore County, Md."

EXCHANGE OF LANDS BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND SAN DIEGO, CALIF.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2993) to authorize an exchange of lands between the city of San Diego, Calif., and the United States, and acceptance by gift of certain lands from the city of San Diego, Calif., which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the word "California", to strike out "by an appropriate deed of conveyance"; on page 3, line 7, after the word "transfer", to insert "and quitclaim"; in line 8, after the words "United States", to strike out "by appropriate deed of conveyance"; in line 11, after the word "interest", to strike out "of" and insert "which"; in line 12, after the word "city", to insert "may claim in and"; on page 5, line 6, after the word "said", to strike out "five"; in line 12, after the words "United States", to strike out "by appropriate deed of conveyance"; on page 6, line 24, after the words "United States", to strike out "by appropriate deed of conveyance"; and on page 7, after line 4, to insert:

Sec. 4. The acceptance by the Secretary of the Navy of the transfer or quitclaim by the city of San Diego of any of the lands herein mentioned shall not be construed as a relinquishment by the United States of its claim of title or interest in said land in any manner arising.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to transfer under such conditions as may be approved by the said Secretary, to the city of San Diego, Calif., without cost to the said city of San Diego, Calif., all right, title, and interest in and to the following parcels, situated in the city of San Diego, Calif., metes and bounds descriptions of which are on file in the Navy Department:

Parcel A. Sixty-one and seventy-two one-hundredths acres, more or less, of Marine Corps base area adjacent to the municipal airport, lying between the southwesterly prolongation of the southeasterly lines of Harasty Street and Southerland Street to the combined pierhead and bulkhead line;

Parcel B. A triangular piece of land of the naval supply depot on the westerly side of Pacific Highway between E Street and F Street, containing six hundred and nineteen square feet, more or less;

Parcel C. A strip of land ten and one-half feet wide, of the naval training station, extending along and adjacent to Rosecrans Street, between Lytton Street and Lowell Street, including a curbed corner at the intersection of Lytton Street and Rosecrans Street, containing an area of one and sixty-eight one-hundredths acres, more or less;

Parcel D. That portion of the Marine Corps base lying to the north of the south side of Water Street extending easterly from

Wright Street, containing an area of four and twenty-five one-hundredths acres, more or less;

Parcel E. A triangular piece of land comprising the corner at the intersection of Barnett Avenue and Pacific Highway, being a part of the Marine Corps base, containing an area of twenty-five one-hundredths of an acre, more or less;

Parcel F. Three areas comprising one and thirty-six one-hundredths acres, more or less, being a part of the destroyer base situated on the north and south sides of Bay Front Street included in the proposed Harbor Drive and a small parcel to the east thereof; in consideration of the transfer and quitclaim to the United States by said city of San Diego, free from all encumbrances, except as hereinafter provided, and without cost to the United States, all right, title, and interest which the said city may claim in and to the following parcels, metes and bounds descriptions of which are on file in the Navy Department:

Parcel 1. A parcel of land between Broadway and E Street and between Pacific Highway and the westerly line of Belt Street in the city of San Diego, Calif., containing an area of one and ninety-three one-hundredths acres, more or less, excepting and reserving therefrom (a) the area held and occupied by the Sunset Sea Food Company under a lease that expires on July 20, 1951; and (b) the area held and occupied by the Star and Crescent Oil Company under a lease that expires April 30, 1942: Provided, That the areas held under said leases, upon expiration of the terms thereof, become the property of the United States in fee simple.

Parcel 2. A parcel of land between E Street and F Street and between Harbor Street and the easterly line of Belt Street in the city of San Diego, Calif., containing an area of two and seven one-hundredths acres, more or less; excepting and reserving therefrom the area held and occupied by the Union Ice Company under a lease that expires on September 23, 1941: Provided, That the area held under said lease, upon expiration of the term thereof becomes the property of the United States in fee simple.

Parcel 3. A parcel of land between F Street and Market Street and Harbor Street and Pacific Highway, in the city of San Diego, Calif., containing an area of four and twenty-six one-hundredths acres, more or less, excepting and reserving therefrom (a) the area held and occupied by the Arrowhead Puritas Distributors, Incorporated, under a lease that expires on February 28, 1947; and (b) the area held and occupied by the General Petroleum Corporation under a lease that expires on March 31, 1948: Provided, That the areas held under said leases, upon the expiration of the terms thereof, become the property of the United States in fee simple.

Parcel 4. A parcel of land between the United States bulkhead line and the United States pierhead line, lying southerly and adjacent to the present Navy pier in the city of San Diego, Calif., containing an area of two and seventy-seven one-hundredths acres, more or less: Provided, That said parcels 1 to 4, inclusive, shall be used for military purposes, and particularly for the purpose of establishing and maintaining thereon piers, landings, buildings, and structures to be used by the United States and reserving to the said city of San Diego perpetual easements in said parcels for the laying and maintaining of underground public utilities, such as sewers, drains, water mains, gas, electric, and power lines across said parcels wherever necessary or convenient.

Sec. 2. The Secretary of the Navy is further authorized, on behalf of the United States, to accept from the city of San Diego, Calif., without cost to the United States, all right, title, and interest of the said city in and to the following-described parcels of land situated in the city of San Diego, Calif.:

Parcel 1. A strip of municipal tidelands four hundred and thirty and five-tenths feet in width and containing fourteen and fifty-one one-hundredths acres, more or less, in the city of San Diego, Calif., lying northerly of and adjacent to the northerly line of the United States destroyer base for military uses of the United States, and particularly to be used by the Navy Department in connection with and as part of the naval destroyer base in the city of San Diego;

Parcel 2. All land lying between the high-water mark and the westerly line of proposed Harbor Drive adjacent to the easterly boundary of the destroyer base, in the city of San Diego, Calif., excluding that portion of the destroyer base embraced within the proposed Harbor Drive on the northerly and southerly sides of Bay Front Street and to the east of proposed Harbor Drive, containing an area of eight acres, more or less;

Parcel 3. All that portion of Balboa Park in the city of San Diego, Calif., in pueblo lots 1136 and 1143 of the pueblo lands of the city of San Diego, Calif., adjoining the southeasterly, southerly, and southwesterly boundaries of the Naval Hospital, San Diego, Calif., containing an area of thirty-two and ninety-three one-hundredths acres, more or less;

Parcel 4. A triangular area embracing portions of lots 2 to 11, inclusive, in West Atlantic Street Addition and a triangular area embracing the unnumbered block in Middletown, lots 7 to 12, inclusive, of block 231; and lots 7 to 12, inclusive, of block 236, in the city of San Diego, Calif., adjoining the northerly and easterly portions of the athletic field of the Marine Corps base, San Diego, Calif., containing an area of two acres, more or less.

Sec. 3. The Secretary of the Navy is further authorized, on behalf of the United States, to accept from the city of San Diego, Calif., without cost to the United States, all right, title, and interest of the said city in and to such other areas abutting the naval properties at San Diego, Calif., as will bring the exterior boundaries thereof to the adjoining boundary of the proposed Harbor Drive as now or hereafter may be located.

Sec. 4. The acceptance by the Secretary of the Navy of the transfer or quitclaim by the city of San Diego of any of the lands herein mentioned shall not be construed as a relinquishment by the United States of its claim of title or interest in said land in any manner arising.

Sec. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACCEPTANCE OF LANDS IN NATIONAL CITY, CALIF.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2991) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States certain lands in the city of National City, Calif., which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the words "United States" to strike out "by an appropriate deed of conveyance"; on page 3, line 23, after the word "The", to strike out "said"; and on page 4, after line 13, to strike out:

That in the event the United States of America shall fail to use the above-described land for a period of 10 successive years, then the same shall revert back to the city of National City, Calif.

And insert:

Sec. 3. The acceptance by the Secretary of the Navy of the transfer or quitclaim by the city of National City of any of the lands herein mentioned shall not be construed as a relinquishment by the United States of its claim of title or interest in said land in any manner arising.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized on behalf of the United States to accept from the city of National City, Calif., without cost to the United States, all right, title, and interest of the said city in and to the following-described area of tide and submerged lands:

All lands situated on the National City side of the San Diego Bay, lying between the line of the mean high tide line and the pierhead line in said bay, as the same has been or may hereafter be established by the Federal Government, and between the prolongation into the Bay of San Diego, to the pierhead line of the boundary line between the city of National City and the city of San Diego and a prolongation into the Bay of San Diego to the pierhead line of the southerly line of the street commonly known as Seventh Street, containing approximately ninety-six and forty-two one-hundredths acres of tidelands, and more particularly described as all or any portion or portions of those tidelands, situated in the city of National City, San Diego County, State of California, commencing at a concrete monument on the northerly line of National City, designated as U. S. C. & G. S. point numbered 49; thence south seventy-one degrees forty-three minutes fifteen seconds west along said northerly line a distance of seventy-two and one-tenth feet to a concrete monument on the mean high-tide line of San Diego Bay, the true point of beginning; thence south forty-eight degrees sixteen minutes east two hundred and sixty-seven and fifty-eight one-hundredths feet; thence south seventy-three degrees fifty-four minutes east one hundred and seventy-nine and four-tenths feet; thence south forty-nine degrees fifty-three minutes thirty-four seconds east two hundred and sixty-one and ninety-five one-hundredths feet; thence south sixty-four degrees five minutes forty-four seconds east four hundred and four and ninety-five one-hundredths feet; thence south forty-nine degrees two minutes fourteen seconds east one hundred and forty-nine and sixty-four one-hundredths feet; thence south sixty-two degrees forty-one minutes fifty-three seconds east two hundred and fifty-one and eighty-one one-hundredths feet; thence south thirty-six degrees thirty-nine minutes eight seconds east two hundred and six and twenty-nine one-hundredths feet; thence south thirty-seven degrees forty-eight minutes forty-one seconds east one thousand and ninety-five and six-tenths feet; thence south sixty-three degrees three minutes fifty-nine seconds west two thousand and ninety-four and two-tenths feet to the bulkhead line of San Diego Bay; thence north twenty-six degrees fifty-six minutes one second west along said bulkhead line two thousand seven hundred and twenty-two and two-tenths feet to an intersection with the westerly prolongation of the northerly line of National City; thence north seventy-one degrees forty-three minutes fifteen seconds east along said northerly line one thousand and eighty-six and sixty-seven one-hundredths feet to the point of beginning, excepting and reserving therefrom a roadway approximately one hundred feet in width along the easterly side.

Sec. 2. The Secretary is authorized to accept title to the above-described tract from the city of National City, Calif., upon the following conditions recited in the city of National City, Calif., Resolution No. 2024:

That the conveyance shall be subject to any and all existing leases on the aforesaid property or tidelands.

That the city of National City may reserve perpetual easements for laying and maintaining sewers and drains across any and all of the above-described land wherever necessary and convenient.

That the above-described tract shall be used for military purposes of the United States and particularly for the purpose of establishing and maintaining thereon piers, landings, buildings, and structures to be used by the United States Navy.

Sec. 3. The acceptance by the Secretary of the Navy of the transfer or quitclaim by the city of National City of any of the lands herein mentioned shall not be construed as a relinquishment by the United States of its claim of title or interest in said land in any manner arising.

Sec. 4. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

JERSEY CENTRAL POWER & LIGHT CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2552) for the relief of the Jersey Central Power & Light Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, after the enacting clause, it is proposed to strike out and insert certain words.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I observe that an adverse opinion has been rendered on this bill. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN L. HINES

The bill (S. 3038) to provide for the advancement of John L. Hines on the retired list of the Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. May we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the War Department recommends the passage of this bill. Its purpose is to provide for the advancement of Maj. Gen. John L. Hines, United States Army, retired, former Chief of Staff of the Army, to the grade of general on the retired list of the Army without the benefit of increased retired pay and allowances. General Hines is the only former Chief of Staff on the retired list who does not hold this rank. It is provided by a law enacted after he had served as Chief of the General Staff.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, one minute. I think we ought to have a better explanation than that. Is this just the entering wedge for giving to retired generals of the Army, later on, greater compensation than the regular compensation?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No retired pay is provided for.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that; but if we enact the measure—

Mr. SHEPPARD. The bill provides that he shall not have the benefit of increased retired pay and allowances.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PAYMENT OF MILEAGE TO EMPLOYEES OF BUREAU OF RECLAMATION

The bill (H. R. 3391) providing payment to employees of the Bureau of Reclamation for mileage traveled in privately owned automobiles was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. May we have an explanation?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, a bill similar to this has passed the Senate at least two, and perhaps three, times.

It also passed the House of Representatives two or three times, but never happened to pass both bodies during the same session.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PREVENTION OF DISSEMINATION OF PULLORUM AND OTHER DISEASES

The bill (S. 3227) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture in cooperation with official State agencies, to prevent the dissemination of pullorum and other diseases of poultry and to improve poultry, poultry products, and hatcheries, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the purposes of this act—

(a) The term "Territory" means any Territory or possession of the United States, including the District of Columbia and excluding the Canal Zone.

(b) The term "commerce" means commerce between the United States and any foreign country; or between any State or Territory and any place outside thereof; or between points within the same State but through any place outside thereof; or within any Territory; or by means of the United States mails, between any two points within the United States, including its possessions.

(c) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States.

(d) The term "person" includes individual, partnership, corporation, and association.

(e) The term "official State agency" means an agency set up in any State or Territory, by law, such as a department of agriculture, college of agriculture, or livestock sanitary board, or any organization, the governing board of which includes one or more representatives of an agency set up by law, which such agency or organization shall have been recognized by the Secretary as suitable for the purpose of participating in the administration of the national poultry improvement plan, but not more than one official State agency shall be recognized in any State or Territory.

SEC. 2. The Secretary is authorized and directed to adopt and, from time to time, as conditions may warrant or require, to alter such a plan as will, in his opinion, improve poultry, poultry products, flocks, and hatcheries within the United States, and prevent the dissemination of pullorum and other diseases of poultry from one State or Territory to any other State or Territory, or from the United States into any foreign country. In the formulation and execution of such a plan, which shall be known as the national poultry improvement plan, the Secretary may cooperate with the appropriate official State agencies and with poultry leaders, poultry breeders, and members of the breeder and commercial hatchery industry in such States and Territories. The Secretary is authorized to devise and adopt an emblem which may be used by persons participating in and complying with the provisions of said plan.

SEC. 3. Each such official State agency may issue regulations for its administration of the said plan, but the said regulations shall not become effective until they have been found by the Secretary to be satisfactory for the purposes of the national poultry improvement plan and have been approved by him.

SEC. 4. When the said regulations have been approved as provided in section 3 hereof, and, thereafter, it is certified to the Secretary by an official State agency that any named person, engaged in the poultry business in the State or Territory of the certifying official State agency, is participating in and complying with the provisions of the national poultry improvement plan, the Secretary may permit such person to use the said national poultry improvement plan emblem and also the prefix "U. S.", in connection with terms provided in the said national poultry improvement plan, in describing, advertising, or selling, hatching eggs, chicks, poultry, or poultry-breeding stock, but, if the Secretary shall become satisfied that any such person shall have ceased such participation or compliance, he shall, in his discretion, suspend or revoke such permission.

SEC. 5. The following acts are declared to be injurious to commerce in hatching eggs, chicks, poults, and poultry breeding stock and are hereby prohibited and made unlawful:

(a) The use of the said national poultry improvement plan emblem or the prefix "U. S." in describing, advertising, or selling, in commerce, any hatching eggs, chicks, poults, or poultry-breeding stock, without the unsuspended and unrevoked permission of the Secretary so to do; or the use of any word or combination of words, letter or combination of letters, or of any emblem, design, or device, or of any false, misleading, or deceitful means or practice in describing, advertising, or selling, in commerce, any hatching eggs, chicks, poults, or poultry-breeding stock for the purpose of indicating that the user is participating in or complying with the provisions of the said national poultry improvement plan when he is not.

(b) The use of the said national poultry improvement plan emblem or the prefix "U. S." in describing, advertising, or selling any hatching eggs, chicks, poults, or poultry-breeding stock, without the unsuspended and unrevoked permission of the Secretary so to do; or the use of any word or combination of words, letter or combination of letters, or of any emblem, design, or device, or of any false, misleading, or deceitful means or practice, in describing, advertising, or selling any hatching eggs, chicks, poults, or poultry-breeding stock for the purpose of indicating that the user is participating in or complying with the provisions of the said national poultry improvement plan when he is not.

Sec. 6. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of section 5 of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and for the first offense, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not to exceed $200, and for each subsequent offense and conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $200 nor more than $500.

Sec. 7. After judgment of the court, notice shall be given by publication in such manner as may be prescribed by such regulations as the Secretary may deem proper.

Sec. 8. This act shall become effective upon the date of its passage: Provided, however, That those persons who, at that time, are participating in and complying with the provisions of any plan for the improvement of poultry, poultry products, flocks, and hatcheries within the United States, approved by the Secretary, may be allowed to use the terms provided in such plan until 6 months from the date of passage of this act, after which time they also shall be subject to the provisions of this act.

Sec. 9. Funds appropriated for carrying into effect the provisions of this act shall be available for allotment by the Secretary to the bureaus and offices of the Department of Agriculture and for transfer to other departments and agencies of the Government which the Secretary may call upon to assist or cooperate in carrying out such purposes or for services rendered or to be rendered in connection therewith.

Sec. 10. If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and of the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

CONTROL OF SOIL EROSION, ARKANSAS

Demarcadora de Limites Entre Colombia y Panama" and for the relief of Jose Antonio Sossa D was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act for the relief of the Comision Mixta Demarcadora de Limites Entre Colombia y Panama," approved May 24, 1938 (52 Stat. 1317, ch. 271), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Government of Colombia the sum of $1,981.30, and to the Government of Panama the sum of $550.25, amounting in all to $2,531.55, in full settlement of all claims against the United States by the Government of Colombia, by the Government of Panama, and by the Comision Mixta Demarcadora de Limites Entre Colombia y Panama, an agency now dissolved, heretofore created by and functioning under and on behalf of such governments, for damages to cargo sustained and expenses incurred by said commission as a result of a collision on December 7, 1936, in the Bay of Panama between the motor launch Don Bosco, chartered by the commission, and Panama Railroad barge No. 205, operated by the Signal Corps, United States Army."

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Jose Antonio Sossa D, owner of the motor launch Don Bosco, the sum of $1,398.46, such payment to be made as an act of grace and not to be construed as a precedent, in full and final settlement of all claims against the United States for damages, including the cost of repairs to the hull, machinery, and other equipment of the said motor launch Don Bosco, and for other damages sustained by the said owner resulting from and due to the same collision described in section 1 of this act.

CHRISTINE LUND

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 815) for the relief of Christine Lund, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "$4,000" and insert "$2,646," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Christine Lund, of Lane County, Oreg., care of Slaterry & Slaterry, Eugene, Oreg., the sum of $2,646, in full satisfaction of her claim against the United States for personal injuries sustained by her when struck on December 16, 1937, at 1½ miles north of Florence, Oreg., by an automobile of the United States operated by H. T. Schinaman, an employee of the Lighthouse Service, then engaged in the performance of his duties as such employee.

Sec. 2. The payment authorized to be made by this act shall not be made until the said Christine Lund has released, in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury, any judgment or other claim arising out of such accident which she may have against the said H. T. Schinaman.

Sec. 3. No part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with such claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with such claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF THELMA JONES

The bill (H. R. 2860) for the relief of Ben Willie Jones as legal representative of Thelma Jones, a deceased minor, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANDREW OLSON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3061) for the relief of Andrew Olson, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Andrew Olson, of Port Townsend, Wash., the sum of $26, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for compensation for services rendered while employed as a laborer at the Marrowstone Point Light Station, Wash., from September 7 to September 15, 1939, such compensation having been withheld from him for the reason that he was not a citizen of the United States during such period: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDMUND S. DENNIS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1531) for the relief of Edmund S. Dennis, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$205.48" and insert "$176.80", and to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Edmund S. Dennis, of Richmond, Va., the sum of $176.80, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States Government for expenses incurred by reason of accident with a Civilian Conservation Corps car on March 26, 1936: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BESSIE SHARRAH

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2988) for the relief of Bessie Sharrah, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$3,000," and insert a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000 to Bessie Sharrah, of Tucson, Ariz., in full settlement of her claim against the United States arising out of a collision between a United States Army truck and a vehicle driven by her husband, George F. Sharrah, and resulting in his death, on or about December 19, 1938: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ZOOK PALM NURSERIES, INC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 808) to confer jurisdiction upon the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Florida, to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Zook Palm Nurseries, Inc., a Florida corporation, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, this bill proposes to confer on the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Florida the authority to try the question whether or not the claimants, the Zook Palm Nurseries, Inc., are entitled to damages against the United States.

The claim arose out of the construction of the Inland Waterway in central Florida, near Palm Beach, and the case is one in which the facts are rather seriously controverted. The amount of the claim is rather large. The Government concedes that damages amounting to some $85,000 probably resulted. Whether or not the Government should be held liable is a close question.

There were two serious questions in controversy, which caused me to suggest important amendments to the bill.

The original bill conferred absolute jurisdiction upon the court to determine the question involved. I recommended an amendment, and the committee approved my recommendation, I being chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill, to provide that the district judge, not the court, but the district judge, without jury, should first determine whether or not there had been executed by the claimant a release, and, secondly, to determine before the trial whether or not there had been an agreement on the part of the Government to build a dike.

The bill now provides that if either of those questions is answered adversely to the claimant, proceedings shall then stop, but if the judge finds that there was no release and that there was an agreement on the part of the Government to build the dike contemplated by the parties when they made a certain settlement, the court shall then proceed and try the case with a jury.

I think there has been worked out a very fair arrangement from the standpoint both of the Government and the complainants in the case. I think the bill is one which should pass. There is no doubt that substantial damages were suffered, but whether or not the Government should be held responsible is a question.

Mr. McKELLAR. Did not the Department report against the enactment of the bill?

Mr. BROWN. The Department's report is not entirely favorable or unfavorable. What impressed me was that the Department conceded that the parties had been damaged to the amount of $85,000. The claim for damages is somewhat larger than that; I think it is almost twice that amount, but the facts are in such controversy that I felt that there should be a determination of the facts. I was of the opinion, however, there should be first a determination by the court as to whether there had been a legal or valid release by the Zook Nursery to the Government.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me that the question whether or not there had been a valid release is one which the committee could determine, and certainly the able Senator from Michigan could determine it as well as any judge who sits in Florida. I do not wish to disparage the judicial authorities in Florida, but I would be satisfied with a determination of the question by the Senator from Michigan, and as he investigated the case, may I ask him if he cares to express an opinion as to whether there was a release?

Mr. BROWN. I may say that if one depended upon the writings alone, he would be unable to come to a sound determination. I would not be satisfied from the writings alone to make a determination of that question. My inclination would be to hold with the Government, but the facts as testified to by the president of the corporation were such that if his statement was true there was not a valid release.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator says it should be left to the judge to pass on the facts.

Mr. BROWN. No—

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator think that such a bill as this would be constitutional, taking into consideration the provision of our Constitution which distinctly provides that "where the value in controversy shall exceed $20 the right of trial by jury shall be preserved"?

Mr. BROWN. I think that the Congress can do anything it desires about a grant of authority to a court to make determination. I thought the determination of the facts was one which the court should make, under all the circumstances. I believe that a jury would readily determine against the Government on the facts which are presented, and I thought that the determination should be confined to a judge, and since we have the power to say that jurisdiction shall be conferred, I think we have the power to limit jurisdiction, and the bill so limits it. It is a mixed question of law and fact. I felt that upon that proposition we ought to leave the determination to the court alone. I think there is no doubt that we have the power to hedge about our consent in the manner in which it has been done in the bill now before the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not sure that I understand the situation, but if I do, I do not see how the Congress can overrule the Constitution and turn over to a judge the right to pass on the facts of any lawsuit. There is a constitutional right to have a jury trial.

Mr. BROWN. We can refuse to grant jurisdiction altogether if we so desire. I believe that under such circumstances we can place in the court jurisdiction of the whole matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest to the Senator that he let the bill go over to another call, so that I can look into it.

Mr. BROWN. I am glad to consent to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

MR. AND MRS. JOHN W. FINLEY

The bill (S. 2667) for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Finley was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mr. and Mrs. John W. Finley, of Roswell, N. Mex., the sum of $2,500. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the death of a minor son, Calvin Finley, who was killed in an accident involving a Civilian Conservation Corps truck on April 24, 1934, east of Roswell, N. Mex.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims or the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Georgia to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Mrs. J. W. Marks of Stephens County, Ga., was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation. If not, let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

KATHERINE SCOTT AND OTHERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2132) for the relief of Katherine Scott, Mrs. J. H. Scott, Jettie Stewart, and Ruth Mincemeyer, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$2,000"; on line 7, to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$1,300"; in line 8, to strike out "$250" and insert "$100"; on line 9, after the names "Missouri", to strike out "$300" and insert "$100"; on line 9, after the words "in all" and the comma, to strike out "$18,050" and insert "$3,500", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Katherine Scott, Ellington, Mo., the sum of $2,000; to Mrs. J. H. Scott, Ellington, Mo., $1,300; to Jettie Stewart, Ellington, Mo., $100; and to Ruth Mincemeyer, Clayton, Mo., $100; in all, $3,500, in full settlement of their respective claims against the United States for personal injuries sustained when the vehicle in which they were riding was struck by a truck of United States Civilian Conservation Corps Camp S-70, Forest Service, Department of Agriculture, on Missouri State Highway No. 106, at the point where it intersects with the park road leading to Camp S-70, June 12, 1936: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISADORE J. FRIEDMAN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2199) for the relief of Isadore J. Friedman, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$10,293.86, in compensation", and to insert "$1,693.86, in full settlement of all claims against the United States," and to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Isadore J. Friedman, of Belmar, N. J., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,693.86, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for property damage and personal injuries suffered by him when a truck owned by the United States Naval Air Station, Lakehurst, N. J., collided with his vehicle on February 5, 1938, on Main Street, Lakehurst, N. J.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAJ. HERBERT A. JACOB

The bill (H. R. 1456) for the relief of Maj. Herbert A. Jacob was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSTRUCTION OF SMALL RESERVOIRS UNDER THE FEDERAL RECLAMATION LAWS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we may revert to Calendar No. 1244, Senate bill 3136, to authorize an appropriation for the construction of small reservoirs under the Federal reclamation laws. I was absent from the floor, in attendance upon the hearing of the Temporary National Economic Committee, when this bill was called, and I have since learned that an objection was made to consideration of the bill by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], who asked that it be permitted to go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what is the nature of the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] requests that the Senate revert to Calendar No. 1244, and consider Senate bill 3136, to authorize an appropriation for the construction of small reservoirs under the Federal reclamation laws.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I shall have no objection to any statement or explanation that the Senator from Wyoming wishes to make.

Mr. TAFT. I object on the ground that I do not believe a bill involving so large an authorization should be passed without time being allowed for debate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I hope the Senator from Ohio will withhold his objection at least until the author of the bill may make an explanation.

Mr. TAFT. Surely.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Arizona was going to ask a question.

Mr. HAYDEN. I say I have no objection to hearing an explanation from the Senator from Wyoming. After we have heard the explanation we can determine what to do.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I merely desire to call attention to the fact that this bill authorizes appropriations up to $5,000,000 for the construction of small reservoirs, each reservoir to cost not more than $50,000 under the provisions of the reclamation law. That means under the provisions of a law which requires the repayment into the Federal Treasury by those who are benefited by the expenditures of the funds which will be expended. In other words, if a small reservoir is constructed, then the owners of the land which will be benefited by the storage of water in that reservoir will be required to repay the expenditures into the Federal Treasury.

The bill authorizes this fund to be taken either from the General Treasury or from the special fund known as the reclamation fund.

It appears to me that the Senator from Arizona will be particularly interested in the facts which I am about to relate, because he and I have cooperated in years past in the effort to build up the reclamation fund.

I will say to the Senator from Ohio that so far as the reclamation fund itself is concerned, the proposal does not in any sense whatsoever constitute a drain upon the taxpayers of the United States. The reclamation fund is built up by receipts from the sale of public lands and by receipts from oil royalties, among other sources. Oil royalties, which are derived from leases upon the public domain, have in recent years been the chief source of revenue for the reclamation fund. Those leases have been issued by the Department of the Interior under a royalty system which, in some cases, is upon a sliding scale and which returns to the Federal Treasury a fund which is subsequently divided between the Federal Government and the States.

The Senator from Arizona well remembers that when the General Leasing Act was passed, my predecessor, the late Senator Kendrick, was largely responsible for securing the amendment of that act in this particular, so that the States would obtain this revenue in lieu of the loss of revenue from taxation. Of the royalty fund, 10 percent goes to the Federal Treasury for general expenses, and 37½ percent goes to the States. The latter fund in turn is divided by State law between the counties and the schools. It is expended for the building of roads and highways. It is expended for the payment of salaries of school teachers and for the maintenance of schools, and in the State of Wyoming it is also expended for the support of the State university.

In addition to the 10 percent which goes to the Federal Government, and the 37½ percent which goes to the States, there is another proportion, namely, 52½ percent, which goes into the reclamation fund.

LANCE CREEK OIL ROYALTIES

The Senator from Arizona will be interested in the fact that beginning last October the Department of the Interior has initiated adverse proceedings against some 100 or more placer mining claims in the Lance Creek oil field in Wyoming. In this field, according to the allegations by the Department of the Interior, there are approximately 1,200 or 1,500 acres of land now being claimed by certain oil companies—the Ohio Oil Co. for one and the Continental Oil Co. for another—under placer locations, which claims the Department of the Interior alleges are invalid. According to the contest proceedings which have been begun, these placer locations, which originated more than 20 years ago, were abandoned and all rights under them had terminated, but later they were attempted to be revived when the value of the land became apparent.

On the 1,200 acres of which I spoke I am advised that something like 15 separate wells have been drilled, each well producing daily, or capable of producing daily, 1,000 barrels of oil. Obviously, 15 oil wells, each capable of producing 1,000 barrels of oil a day, would be a source of tremendous revenue to the reclamation fund and to the treasury of the State of Wyoming if the claims of the Department of the Interior are sustained. If the placer-law locations are maintained, the Federal Treasury, the reclamation fund, and the State will receive no royalty. But, on the other hand, if the adverse proceedings of the Department succeed, I think it is safe to say that this Lance Creek field in Wyoming alone will produce for the State of Wyoming at least $3,000,000, and for the reclamation fund, I am told, approximately $5,000,000, which is the authorization for future appropriations provided in this bill.

These adverse proceedings of which I spoke were initiated between October of last year and January of this year, and I am advised that the Interior Department is very confident of the strength of the case which it has brought. And if it should succeed there would be this great accretion to the reclamation fund and to the Treasury.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I have no objection to the use of the reclamation fund, but as I read the bill, it authorizes the appropriation of $5,000,000 out of the General Treasury for the construction of 100 small reservoirs at any point that the Secretary wants to place them. That is $50,000 apiece. Does the Senator think this should be a general appropriation from the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Senator will observe that that is an amendment which was put in in the committee, because of the fear of some members that the reclamation fund would not be large enough to accomplish this purpose, and because of the knowledge by members of the committee of the fundamental desirability of the suggested program. It is for this reason that I have been explaining to the Senator from Arizona that the accretion to the reclamation fund may be considerable in the very near future.

The Senator may recall that within the past few months the courts finally decided that the United States was entitled to lease a certain very valuable area of oil land in the State of California. It has been a producing section for many years. And it is estimated that that in itself will result in the accrual of several million dollars, maybe $6,000,000, to the Federal reclamation fund. The matter is now under study in the Department of the Interior as the result of a query addressed to the Department by the Senator from Arizona and myself.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I want it distinctly understood that the purposes to be accomplished by an appropriation of this kind are highly desirable. There is no question that particularly in the Great Plains area, in the so-called Dust Bowl, where thousands and thousands of people have been driven off the land, these small reclamation projects are the very things that ought to be undertaken in order to allow the people to remain, rather than move away and become a burden on other States, as has been so graphically portrayed in books like The Grapes of Wrath. That proposal is entirely sound. Heretofore we have made appropriations of this kind out of the Federal Treasury because there was not enough money in the reclamation fund to carry on the work in that way. Of course, if the reclamation fund were a very large fund and there were great accretions of money coming into it, the picture would be different.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] brings out some new facts. There is a possibility that money will come in from another source, such as that recently assured us by the Supreme Court decision in the Elk Hills case in California, which, as he states, will bring in a very substantial sum of money. That decision makes the picture a little different; but personally I should like to obtain the facts and have them all before us before we act.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator desires to study the matter a little further, I shall not press for consideration at this time.

Mr. HAYDEN. For that reason I prefer to have the bill go over until we may know exactly what we are doing.

PERMANENT IMPROVEMENTS INSTEAD OF "GHOST" CITIES

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, before relinquishing the floor I desire to add another word. In the past when mineral resources in Western States and in other States have been exhausted, nothing has remained to give testimony of the wealth underground except a few "ghost" cities. Under the program of using oil royalties for the development of reclamation we have the possibility of permanent improvements upon the surface of the land to take the place of the mineral resources under the surface which have been taken out and spent. There are thousands of acres of land in the State of Wyoming, in the neighborhood of the Lance Creek field, which would benefit from the program which I suggest.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. TAFT. What bothers me is the appropriation from the general-revenue fund. If we want to build flood-control dams or anything of the sort in Ohio, we must have a report from the Army engineers, and then Congress must pass a bill authorizing the particular projects.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Under the provisions of this bill an appropriation would have to be made for the particular projects.

Mr. TAFT. We seem to be authorizing a hundred different $50,000 dams which have not as yet been reported upon by the Reclamation Service, the Army engineers, or anybody else.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think the Senator is mistaken in that respect. The present bill is the primary authorization; and no appropriation could be made until exactly the procedure the Senator has just outlined had been followed; and specific recommendation for a specific project would have to be submitted to the Appropriations Committee, of which the Senator is a member, before any of the money could be expended.

Mr. TAFT. In connection with flood-control expenditures we must authorize the expenditure for particular dams; and it seems to me that is a wise procedure. The question of the reclamation fund is a question which is entirely outside my objection. However, when it comes to the General Treasury, I believe particular projects ought to be authorized by Congress before we proceed to authorize the appropriation.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The projects involved are very small.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. I have great sympathy for what the Senator from Wyoming is telling us. His predecessor, Senator Kendrick, was responsible for the enactment of the law which put a part of the oil royalties into the reclamation fund. As a result of that action it is my recollection—the Senator can verify it—that more than $30,000,000 has been paid in the past into the reclamation fund from oil royalties in Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In the State of Wyoming alone.

Mr. HAYDEN. What is the total amount now?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is in excess of that. I do not have the exact figures with me at the moment.

Mr. HAYDEN. If there were to be future substantial accretions to the fund from that source the picture would be different from what it now is. I should like to look into the matter a little further.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. As the Senator has said, the State of Wyoming has poured millions of dollars into the Federal Treasury in oil royalties. If we should eventually pass this bill—and, of course, I shall not press it at the moment—it would mean that a part of that money would come back to be a permanent endowment to the State. I shall call the bill up at a later time.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a statement which I prepared last Saturday with respect to royalties in the Lance Creek field may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks in connection with Senate bill 3136.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OIL ROYALTIES IN LANCE CREEK

A huge fund in oil royalties for Wyoming schools and roads and a similar fund for reclamation, the total estimated at not less than $10,000,000, will be available under the provisions of the O'Mahoney-Greever Act if a Government contest against claims of the Ohio and Continental oil companies in Lance Creek is successful.

For more than a year the Department of the Interior, under Secretary Ickes, has been investigating the charge that these two companies are holding more than 1,200 acres of the most valuable Lance Creek oil lands under invalid placer locations.

According to the reports which I have received, 15 wells, all of them producers of at least a thousand barrels each, have been drilled by these two companies on this area. If the information which has been given to me is correct and the Government succeeds in the contest it has initiated, this tract will probably rival the Salt Creek section 36 as a producer of revenue for the schools and counties of Wyoming and the State university. The Ohio and Continental oil companies are seeking to hold the lands under placer locations which require no royalty to be paid to the Government. If the Government prevails, the oil companies would have to surrender possession and the lands would be offered for sale at competitive bidding to the highest bidder. A huge bonus would in all probability have to be paid as well as annual royalties mounting into hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The Leasing Act provides that the royalties paid to the Government shall be divided between the State and the Federal Government. The State's share is 37½ percent of the total; 10 percent goes to the Federal Treasury, and the remaining 52½ percent goes to the reclamation fund. By State law, the royalty which goes to the State is divided among the common schools, among the counties for the building of roads, and to the State university for its support. Every citizen of the State thus participates in the benefits derived from the development of oil on the public domain.

One of the greatest difficulties we are now encountering with respect to the continued development of reclamation and the construction of small reservoirs in the West is to be found in the depletion of the reclamation fund. If this contest is successful, I am told that several million dollars would accrue to the reclamation fund. This would provide funds from which it would be possible to secure appropriations for the construction of small reservoirs under my reservoir bill, which was approved this week by the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

The area involved is outside of the original Lance Creek field. Placer locations were made almost 25 years ago but were then abandoned, according to the Government. It is charged that no effort was made to revive these locations until the recent activity in the Lance Creek field. It will be the contention of the Government that no work was done upon the lands by the Ohio and Continental companies or by any of the original locators until long after all rights had expired and the provisions of the Leasing Act had gone into effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 3784) for the relief of the estate of J. D. Warlick was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

C. Z. BUSH AND W. D. KENNEDY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3481), for the relief of C. Z. Bush and W. D. Kennedy, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of" to strike out "$2,500", and insert "$1,204.50", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to C. Z. Bush, of Dawson, Ga., the sum of $1,204.50 for personal injuries sustained, and to W. D. Kennedy, of Dawson, Ga., the sum of $72.80 for property damage suffered, in full satisfaction of their claims against the United States, sustained when the automobile in which they were riding was struck by a National Park Service truck operated in connection with the Civilian Conservation Corps, on the Dawson-Albany Highway, near Dawson, Ga., on August 12, 1937: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SESQUICENTENNIAL ANNIVERSARY OF SIGNING OF FIRST UNITED STATES PATENT LAW

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 206) creating a joint committee to arrange for the celebration of the sesquicentennial anniversary of the signing of the first United States patent law was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby created a joint committee consisting of the chairman of the Senate Committee on Patents, the chairman of the House Committee on Patents, the Secretary of Commerce, the Commissioner of Patents, and five other members to be selected by them, with power and authority to make suitable arrangements for an appropriate observance of the sesquicentennial of the first United States patent law.

Sec. 2. That the President of the United States is requested to set aside April 10, 1940, as Inventors' and Patent Day to invite a general public commemoration of an event which has proved so important and salutary to this Nation.

Sec. 3. That the committee shall present to the Senate and the House of Representatives suggestions for suitable exercises whereby Congress may mark the anniversary.

The preamble was agreed to.

JOHN L. HINES

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Calendar No. 1236, Senate bill 3038.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] objected when the bill was first called.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, when the bill was reached on the calendar I objected. I find that there is a proviso in the bill that there is to be no increase in retired pay. With the understanding that there is to be no increase in retired pay either now or hereafter, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 3038) to provide for the advancement of John L. Hines on the retired list of the Army was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That John L. Hines, formerly Chief of Staff of the Army of the United States and now major general on the retired list of the Army, shall, beginning with the date of the enactment of this Act, have the rank of a general on the retired list of the Army: Provided, That the said John L. Hines shall receive no increase in retired pay, allowances, or other pecuniary benefits by reason of the enactment of this Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the calendar.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its work today it adjourn until Thursday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AUTHORIZATION FOR APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE TO REPORT DURING ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that during the adjournment of the Senate following today's session the Appropriations Committee may be authorized to report any measures before it on which it may be ready to act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ELIZABETH COSBY YOUNGER

Mr. BYRNES. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 230, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 230) submitted by Mr. GLASS on February 7, 1940, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Elizabeth Cosby Younger, widow of Thomas L. Younger, late custodian of the Senate Office Building, a sum equal to 1 year's compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

EXPEDITIOUS SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES WITH THE UNITED STATES

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I give notice that as soon as possible after the disposition of the next appropriation bill I shall move to take up for consideration Senate bill 915, Calendar No. 475, to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes. Our deceased friend, the late Senator Logan, reported this bill to the Senate at the last session of Congress.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there was so much disturbance that I did not hear the nature of the statement.

Mr. KING. I intend to press for consideration of the so-called Logan bill at as early a date as possible following the disposition of the next appropriation bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, of course the Senator may give notice to that effect. However, I think it ought to be stated that a few days ago a letter was received and put into the Record from Mr. Dean Acheson, who was chairman of a committee appointed by a former Attorney General to consider this whole subject. In that letter he states that the committee will require further time to study the subject. I hope the committee will be given further time, because I think the average Member of the Senate probably has not had an opportunity to study the full implications of the measure. I should not like to see it brought up until the committee has had sufficient time to study it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I feel that we have been very patient in failing to press for consideration at an earlier date. At least for the present I shall not modify the suggestion I made a moment ago.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATION—NOMINATIONS PASSED OVER

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, inasmuch as the nomination of Linus C. Glotzbach to be regional director of the W. P. A. for region VII, and that of S. L. Stolte to be work-projects administrator for Minnesota, will probably entail some discussion, I ask that they be passed over until the other nominations are disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the two nominations referred to will be temporarily passed over, until the other nominations are acted upon.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Philip B. Fleming to be Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

CUSTOMS SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Joseph T. Sylvester to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 1, with headquarters at Portland, Maine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS—NOMINATION PASSED OVER

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask that the nomination of John V. Collard to be postmaster at North Collins, N. Y., be recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

POSTMASTERS

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the remaining nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the remaining nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Marine Corps.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations in the Marine Corps be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Marine Corps are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar, except for the two nominations passed over.

WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATION NOMINATIONS PASSED OVER

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief explanation of the two nominations passed over.

Mr. Glotzbach has been nominated by the President for the post of regional director of the W. P. A. for region VII; and S. L. Stolte, of St. Paul, has been nominated to the position of work-projects administrator for Minnesota.

The committee took very full evidence in the matter; the typewritten record is quite elaborate. From that evidence it appears that Mr. Glotzbach was formerly assistant State administrator, was then promoted to be State administrator, and that while he was so serving what is known as the Woodrum amendment to the relief act was adopted. Under that amendment the hours of work were increased, the pay somewhat decreased, and certain persons who had been on the rolls for 18 months or more were dismissed. In Minneapolis there was a strike against this provision of the law. I think, probably, I had better read the provision of the law under which this action was taken. It is section 15a of the law and reads as follows:

SEC. 15. (a) The Commissioner shall fix a monthly earning schedule for persons engaged upon work projects financed in whole or in part from funds appropriated by section 1, which shall not substantially affect the current national average labor cost per person of the Work Projects Administration. After August 31, 1939, such monthly earning schedule shall not be varied for workers of the same type in different geographical areas to any greater extent than may be justified by differences in the cost of living. The Commissioner shall require that the hours of work for all persons engaged upon work projects financed in whole or in part by funds appropriated by section 1 shall (1) be 130 hours per month except that the Commissioner, in his discretion, may require a lesser number of hours of work per month in the case of relief workers with no dependents, and the earnings of such workers shall be correspondingly reduced, and (2) not exceed 8 hours in any day and shall not exceed 40 hours in any week.

There was a penalty attached in section 28 of that act.

SEC. 28. Any person who knowingly and with intent to defraud the United States makes any false statement in connection with any application for any work project, employment, or relief aid under the appropriations in this joint resolution, or diverts, or attempts to divert, or assists in diverting, for the benefit of any person or persons not entitled thereto, any portion of such appropriations, or any services or real or personal property acquired thereunder, or who knowingly, by means of any fraud, force, threat, intimidation, or boycott, or discrimination on account of race, religion, political affiliations, or membership in a labor organization, deprives any person—of any of the benefits to which he may be entitled under any such appropriations, or attempts so to do, or assists in so doing, or who disposes of, or assists in disposing of, except for the account of the United States, any property upon which there exists a lien securing a loan made under the provisions of this joint resolution or the Emergency Relief Appropriation Acts of 1935, 1936, 1937, and 1938, shall be deemed guilty of a felony and fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than 2 years, or both. The provisions of this section shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law, or of this joint resolution.

There was, in Minneapolis, a strike of the employees against this act. And it seems that the mayor of the city did not protect those who wanted to go to work, and the strikers prevented those who had been employed and wanted to go to work from going to work. The result was that there was a shut-down for a few days. Then the matter was settled by those who had been employed going back to work. In the meantime, an indictment for conspiracy to violate section 28 of the law to which I have referred was brought against, I think, 165 persons, if I am correct as to the number, who attempted to prevent, or were charged with conspiracy to prevent, persons who had been employed by W. P. A. from working. In due time the case came up for trial before the court. As I have said, it was a conspiracy case and they were all tried together. I believe 32 or 33 were convicted; the charges against 2 or 3 were dismissed by the court and the remainder, so far as I know and so far as the record which we have goes, are still pending. It may be that they have been dismissed since that time, but I do not think that appeared before the committee. At any rate, the leaders were convicted.

It seemed to the subcommittee—and the three members of the subcommittee were unanimous in their opinion—that this was a strike against a law passed by the Congress, and that it should not be excused, especially when the committee had before it the record of the conviction of those who had been engaged in the strike. Therefore, the subcommittee reported that in its judgment the nomination of Mr. Glotzbach and the nomination of Mr. Stolte should be confirmed.

What I have stated was the only reason given for their not being confirmed. There was no personal objection and, indeed, both men were shown by the evidence to be men of good character and standing. One of them, Mr. Glotzbach, appeared before the committee. He seemed to be a very fair man and had testified in the court case, but the United States district attorney for that district stated that he alone was responsible for the prosecution and that Mr. Glotzbach was simply under a subpoena to testify in the case. Mr. Victor E. Anderson, United States attorney, wrote Senator BARKLEY from St. Paul under date of January 25, 1940, and I read from his letter as follows:

Upon direction of the Attorney General I had the grand jury reconvened to consider the violence that grew out of such W. P. A. strike, with the result that something like 168 individuals were indicted—

I said 165 were indicted; I was mistaken; the number was 168—either for a substantive offense of violating section 28 of the Emergency Appropriation Act of 1939 or for conspiracy to violate such provision. Of course, neither Mr. Glotzbach nor Mr. Stolte had anything to do with the reconvening of the grand jury, the proceedings had before such grand jury, or in the indictments that resulted from testimony produced before such grand jury. However, upon trials that were subsequently had, both of these gentlemen appeared under subpoena and testified as Government witnesses.

Thirty-three of the defendants have thus far been convicted, two have been acquitted, and against three the charges were dismissed by the trial court. A number of these cases still remain for disposition and in all likelihood additional trials will be required unless by appropriate pleas as to certain defendants who were very active in the strike the cases are disposed of by withdrawals of the pleas of not guilty.

I do not think it is necessary to read further from Mr. Anderson's letter.

The report of the subcommittee recommending the confirmation of the nominations of Mr. Glotzbach and Mr. Stolte was made to the full committee and the full committee—not unanimously but unanimously with the exception of one or two votes, if I recall correctly—voted to report the nominations favorably. That report is now before the Senate for action, either confirming or rejecting the nominations.

MR. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator has reminded the Senate that the report was unanimous with the exception of several Senators.

There was in Minnesota the labor disturbance to which the Senator from Tennessee has referred. I have objected to the confirmation of the nominations of Mr. Glotzbach and Mr. Stolte because of the policy they pursued. I did so before the subcommittee and the main committee, and do so now.

Labor has strenuously objected to the confirmation of their nominations. It is not only the junior Senator from Minnesota who is objecting, but also the Central Labor Union in Minneapolis, representing 40,000 members and 120 unions, whose resolutions of protest I have here, and also telegrams and statements by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, and others, against the policy which was pursued. I also have here as well an editorial which appeared in Labor, the weekly publication of the railroad brotherhoods, with which we are well acquainted, and numerous other newspaper articles which I ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matters referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., February 19, 1940.

Senator ERNEST LUNDEEN,

Senate Office Building, Floor of United States Senate:

Letter from Senator ALLEN W. BARKLEY received only this morning discloses he misread my letter regarding position of Central Labor Union on Glotzbach. He takes position we are in favor of Glotzbach, when you know we are drastically opposed. I wired him this morning immediately on receipt of his letter in endeavor to correct his position. If BARKLEY speaks or does anything in favor of Glotzbach, hope you will use this wire. Good luck and best wishes.

BOB CRAMER,

Editor, Minneapolis Labor Review.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., July 13, 1939.

HON. ERNEST LUNDEEN,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I enclose herewith a copy of a declaration relating to the W. P. A. situation which exists throughout the Nation adopted unanimously by a conference of the representatives of national and international unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. This conference was held at the Washington Hotel, this city, on July 12. I respectfully request that you give this declaration careful and sympathetic consideration.

The representatives in attendance at the conference referred to represented many millions of workers affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. In the statements made by these representatives at the conference they reflected the deep feeling which exists among working people in the different communities throughout the land because of the elimination of the prevailing-rate-of-wage section from the W. P. A. relief measure recently enacted by the Congress of the United States.

In submitting the enclosed statement for your information and consideration, I appeal to you to remedy the existing economic situation prevailing among W. P. A. workers by giving support to a prevailing-rate provision to be applied on W. P. A. construction projects launched and carried forward in the different cities and towns throughout the Nation.

Very sincerely yours,

WM. GREEN,
President, American Federation of Labor.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO THE CONFERENCE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL UNIONS ON THE W. P. A. SITUATION.
(The report was unanimously adopted)

Both the Congress of the United States and the public have evidenced deep interest and manifested grave concern in the spontaneous strikes which have taken place within the past few days upon W. P. A. jobs in various parts of the country. These protests which have been against wage reductions have been erroneously interpreted as strikes against the Government when as a matter of fact they have been the manifestations on the part of wage earners to maintain the standards of work and of wages built up through years of effort. The very lifeblood of a trade-union structure is the standard union rate of wages. It is perfectly understandable that our trade-unions shall use all of their economical strength by every legitimate means to maintain their respective standards of rates of wages on public as well as private enterprises.

The president of the American Federation of Labor, recognizing that immediate consideration should be given to this alarming situation and in order that a definite policy be approved for the guidance of organized labor as represented by the American Federation of Labor, has called this conference of the officers and representatives of national and international unions affiliated to the American Federation of Labor.

It should be evident to all concerned that wage earners in general and particularly those who have been organized for many years, do not lay down their tools unless some situation vitally affecting their interests has arisen which cannot be adjusted through the method of negotiations, conciliation, and arbitration. The cause for these Nation-wide protests, these spontaneous strikes, was an arbitrary increase in the hours of work for labor on W. P. A. work resulting in the reduction of hourly wages running over 50 percent in the hourly rate. This cutting of wages in half by the increasing of working hours was the result of action taken by the conferees of the Senate and of the House of Representatives working under a so-called emergency situation—the necessity of having W. P. A. appropriations made so that W. P. A. workers might be continued in their employment on July 1. Previously the House of Representatives had passed the W. P. A. measure which eliminated the prevailing-wage provision. The United States Senate had passed a measure which contained the prevailing-wage provision. Pressure was brought to bear on Congress to enact the W. P. A. appropriation bill before midnight June 30. This tremendous pressure for immediate action by Congress prevented adequate discussion of serious consequences that would follow immediately should the provisions of the prevailing wage be eliminated from the act. This action taken by Congress was seemingly a violation of the principles covering wage earners on all other Government projects which had heretofore been established by Congress. Congress had heretofore enacted, and the President signed, the Bacon-Davis Act which provides for the prevailing wage on work done by the Government. If enacted, and the President approved, the Walsh-Healey Act which provides for the payment of the prevailing wage on all manufactured goods purchased by the United States Government on all orders amounting to $10,000 or over. Ever since W. P. A. has functioned the prevailing wage has governed and has been paid under joint resolution of Congress whereby the President was authorized and did fix the rates of wages so as not to affect adversely or otherwise tend to decrease the going rates of wages paid for works of a similar nature.

It is clearly evident from the foregoing that the policy of the Government up to this time has been to establish, formulate, and administer its labor policy so as to protect the workers in the prevailing wages established and followed in free and private enterprise.

It has always been the definite policy of the Government up to this time to so protect and advance the rights of wage earners to collective bargaining in free enterprise in order that advanced standards of compensation and of working conditions might be established for all workers from time to time.

It is difficult and alarming to believe that the Government of the United States is now bent on a policy of wage cutting and of lengthening working hours and under the cloak of alleged relief bring additional suffering to the great mass of our wage earners.

When the original emergency appropriation was first enacted provision was made for a large building program under the Public Works Administration. Under it W. P. A. construction was first limited to $5,000 projects, and then to $25,000 projects. At the present time it has increased so tremendously that we find that one single construction project for revenue-producing purposes is under construction and embraces an expenditure of over $40,000,000. The wages of the men employed in this, as well as other large construction programs are now arbitrarily reduced by over 50 percent. Then too it is noteworthy that humans—the workers of our land—are now receiving much less consideration than is being shown to business and to commodities they sell. Neither Congress nor the Federal administration have heretofore attempted to reduce the price of materials. To the contrary, the attempt to reduce the cost of production has been placed entirely upon the shoulders of labor and is to be taken out of the sweat of the wage earners. As a matter of fact W. P. A. today is no longer engaged in a purely relief enterprise. It is engaged in construction work never designed for relief purposes and under cloak of a relief measure is working a vital injury not alone to labor but likewise to free enterprise in the construction of other fields of industry.

If the Government is to continue in its construction policy and in venturing into other fields in competition with free enterprise, then in our judgment it should prove an exemplar in the establishment and development of a labor policy that will tend to raise the standards of life and work rather than to lower them and repress our wage earners.

"There is a well established method for the redress of grievances—the right of protest, the right of petition, the right of appeal to Congress, and to be heard. This conference is aware that the Congress is now in session. In keeping with our rights this conference, therefore, petitions Congress immediately to redress grievances and wrongs herein complained of by immediately reenacting the provisions calling for the observance of the prevailing wage rate on W. P. A. projects. In order that these declarations and petition may be carried out without delay, your committee recommends that the president of the American Federation of Labor be authorized and directed to appoint a representative committee whose membership shall include the president of the American Federation of Labor, the presidents of the several departments of the American Federation of Labor, and such other officers of national and international unions as he may deem advisable."

We likewise recommend that this committee present this action of our conference and of this declaration and petition to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to urge immediate and favorable cooperation in this effort to right these grievances and wrongs.

It is our further recommendation that upon adjournment of this conference the representatives of all unions in attendance visit their respective United States Senators and Congressmen, and urge upon them the necessity for immediate and favorable action on this petition. Then, too, we recommend that copies of this statement of grievances and petition for relief be forwarded immediately to all central labor unions affiliated to the American Federation of Labor for their information and guidance.

FIGHT ON, GREEN URGES

Day letter.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 5, 1940.

GEORGE E. MURK,

18 North Eighth Street, Minneapolis:

Regret, because of engagements previously made, impossible to attend labor's dinner meeting at Minneapolis on January 6. The indictment and conviction of W. P. A. strikers in Minneapolis arouses resentment among all classes of working men and women. The American Federation of Labor sought to prevent such procedure through appeals that the Government cease and desist in its policy of prosecution. Now we feel it has resolved itself into persecution. We protest the action taken. We deplore it. In our opinion, men and women have a right to strike against injustice without being classified as criminals. We urge the officers and members of the American Federation of Labor to do all that lies within their power to have the sentences of W. P. A. workers set aside.

WILLIAM GREEN,
President, American Federation of Labor.

[From Minneapolis Labor Review of September 8, 1939]

"PERSECUTION," SAYS PRESIDENT GREEN ABOUT W. P. A. INDICTMENTS—GREEN PRAISES C. L. U. FOR AIDING DEFENSE OF W. P. A. MARTYRS—CONDEMNNS WHOLESALE ARRESTS AND DRAGGING MANAGED VICTIMS THROUGH STREETS—"WORKING PEOPLE EVERYWHERE PROTEST AGAINST SUCH A POLICY PURSUED BY GOVERNMENT," HE DECLARES. BAD ENOUGH TO SUFFER PAIN OF UNEMPLOYMENT WITHOUT BEING PERSECUTED, A. F. OF L. PRESIDENT TELLS COMMITTEE

President William Green of the American Federation of Labor at Duluth Labor Day branded the indictment and arrest of W. P. A. workers as persecution, not prosecution.

The A. F. of L. chief displayed deep interest in the W. P. A. victims and commended the Minneapolis Central Labor Union for defending and seeking bail for them.

President Green's complete statement, reflecting the sentiment of 5,000,000 members of the American Federation of Labor throughout the country, follows:

"It seems quite clear that the alleged prosecution of W. P. A. workers in Minneapolis is persecution.

"That is made clear in the wholesale arrests which have been made, the way in which the victims have been arrested, the manner in which they have been unnecessarily humiliated, and in the exorbitant bail which has been fixed.

"Working people everywhere protest against such a policy pursued by the Government at a time when more than 10,000,000 are unemployed.

"It is bad enough for workers to suffer the pain of unemployment; it is cruelty when the Government adds to this suffering through persecution such as is being inflicted on workers in Minneapolis.

"The membership of the American Federation of Labor will extend to these persecuted people their sympathy and full measure of moral support.

"The work of the Minneapolis Central Labor Union in defending these persecuted workers is to be commended."

President Green, who was in Duluth to deliver the Labor Day address, gave this statement to a committee that had been sent by the Minneapolis Central Labor Union W. P. A. defense committee to confer with him.

The committee was headed by Chairman George Murk of the defense committee. Other members were Organizer Roy Wier, of the Central Labor Union, and R. D. Cramer.

It was evident from the attitude of the A. F. of L. president that throughout the ranks of the A. F. of L. there is bitter resentment against the outrageous persecution that has been inflicted on Minneapolis W. P. A. workers.

[From Minneapolis Labor Review of July 14, 1939]

GREEN CALLS MEETING TO GAIN W. P. A. REPEAL

WASHINGTON, D. C.—William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, called a conference of the presidents of all the national and international unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor to be held here July 12 to consider "the W. P. A. strike situation" caused by the provision in the W. P. A. Appropriation Act ending the payment of prevailing hourly wages to W. P. A. workers and increasing the number of hours per month for hundreds of thousands of those on W. P. A. rolls.

In a statement announcing the convening of the conference, Mr. Green said:

"The general discontent now manifesting itself throughout the country in strikes on W. P. A. projects is the inevitable consequence of the elimination of the prevailing-wage principle from the W. P. A. bill recently adopted by Congress.

"The entire Nation, as well as organized labor, had accepted the prevailing-wage principle as a fixed and permanent policy of the Government. It was incorporated in the Walsh-Healey Act, in the administration of the P. W. A., in Government construction projects, and in all relief measures since 1929.

"When the W. P. A. Act for the current fiscal year was passed by the House, the prevailing-wage clause was omitted. The American Federation of Labor then concentrated its fight in the Senate to have it restored. It was restored by the Senate. Then, for some mysterious reason, it was eliminated in the conference report which was finally adopted by Congress.

"While the W. P. A. Administrator favored the elimination of the prevailing-wage principle, we cannot believe he and his aides reflected the attitude of the administration on this subject.

"A vital principle is at stake. The wage standards of organized labor, built up through years of sacrifice, suffering, and collective bargaining are threatened.

"It is our purpose at the conference called for Wednesday to organize all the political and economic strength we possess in an effort to prevail upon Congress to amend the W. P. A. Act in conformity with the policy that has been consistently maintained for many years by the Government."

[From Minneapolis Labor Review of July 28, 1939]

MINNEAPOLIS FACTS RELATED BY LABOR—BLAME FOR TROUBLE PLACED ON GLOTZBACH AND JITTERY STRIKE POLICE

Minneapolis is indebted to Labor, official weekly organ of the railroad unions, for getting the facts of the Minneapolis W. P. A. situation to its more than half million readers in the following article published last week:

"That Congress and the administration have made a frightful mess of unemployment relief is increasingly apparent as the disastrous results of legislation hastily put through a few hours before the beginning of this fiscal year becomes better understood.

"Labor's fears that chiseling employers would seize upon the new relief wage rates to batter down standards in industry are being tragically confirmed. Herbert Rivers, secretary of the A. F. of L. building-trades department, says he has been advised from several sections that contractors are demanding drastic reductions in union scales.

"If this program is not abandoned, Rivers declares, there will be an 'avalanche of strikes.'

RESENTMENT WIDESPREAD

"Thousands of men struck in various parts of the country. Most of them have gone back in a sullen and resentful mood. Other thousands have been summarily fired on orders of Col. Francis C. Harrington, W. P. A. Administrator, because they were away from their jobs 5 days.

"But this is only the beginning of trouble. Relief officials anticipate a thunderous protest next September, when workers in the North and West will be compelled to take substantial wage cuts.

SIX HUNDRED AND FIFTY THOUSAND TO LOSE JOBS

"Before that date 650,000 heads of families, representing more than 2,000,000 persons, will be turned adrift, to fend for themselves, and an undetermined number will be dropped from the rolls because they have been on relief for 18 months or longer.

"Relief officials concede that these drastic measures will be a body blow to the efficiency of the W. P. A. It will be reduced 'almost to zero,' according to Col. Brehon B. Somervell, administrator for New York City.

"The American Federation of Labor is trying to correct the situation through legislation, but has made no progress. For one thing, the legislative situation is against anything being done. For another, public sentiment has been inflamed against the relief workers by grossly exaggerated stories of the W. P. A. strike in Minneapolis.

POLICE GUNS BARK

"In that city guns barked and tear-gas bombs were thrown, with fatal results. A policeman died from a heart attack after a clash with pickets, and a bystander was fatally shot.

"Mayor G. E. Leach, of Minneapolis, in highly inflammatory statements, attempted to place responsibility on the strikers. He made hysterical appeals for Federal and State troops, the idea being to create the impression that the situation was out of hand.

"Labor communicated with responsible labor leaders in Minneapolis, and they declared Leach's own cops fomented the trouble, and that the Minnesota relief administrator must also assume a large share of the responsibility.

GLOTZBACH AND STOLTE HARD BOILED

"The strike, Labor's informant said, was entirely orderly until the police got tough. Had W. P. A. Administrator Glotzbach been interested in preserving peace, he would have closed down the project until the resentment and excitement had subsided.

"Glotzbach was determined, however, to show that he was the boss, and insisted that the work should go on. Pickets were thrown about the job, and the police came in. They manhandled the workers, and there was some resistance, but no violence, as far as the pickets were concerned. A policeman with a bad heart died from the excitement, and Mayor Leach proclaimed to the world he was a martyr.

BAD CASE OF JITTERS

"A day or two later policemen became jittery and laid down a barrage of tear gas, and followed it up with gunfire. One person was shot, but the bullet came from a police gun.

"A painstaking investigation by labor representatives and impartial citizens failed to disclose that a single picket carried a weapon.

"A dozen sensible policemen, with a proper appreciation of the rights of the workers, could easily have handled the situation. But that would not have been to the glory of Mayor Leach, who seized an opportunity to strut in the limelight and to capitalize the miseries of the jobless to make a Roman holiday for the vicious Citizens' Alliance, an organization of labor haters.

FACTS NOT REPORTED

"These facts were carefully omitted from newspaper dispatches sent out from Minneapolis, which sought to create an impression that rebellious relievers were murdering innocent people in cold blood.

"Members of Congress and the President were fooled. When President William Green and a delegation of the A. F. of L. officials went to the White House to urge legislative relief, Roosevelt said that nothing could be done, and emphasized the Minneapolis situation as one reason why the administration would not intervene.

"Friends of labor in Congress said the bad impression created by the misleading stories made action impossible, even if the legislative situation were otherwise favorable.

CONCESSIONS TO LABOR

"On Wednesday an agreement was reached between Gov. Harold Stassen, of Minnesota, and the State W. P. A. administrator providing for resumption of the W. P. A. program in Minneapolis, and it was approved by Colonel Harrington.

"The agreement makes substantial concessions to the leaders of Minneapolis labor, who have gallantly supported the relievers and endeavored to offset the effects of propaganda. The labor men insisted the strikers must not be penalized to the extent of being deprived of a chance to earn the necessities of life.

"Glottbach was disposed to be hard-boiled, but finally modified his position somewhat.

"Harrington said those who sign an affidavit that they have not engaged in illegal activities would be returned to the pay roll.

"That, apparently, composes the situation so far as Minneapolis is concerned, but it does not remove the damage resulting from giving the country an entirely erroneous picture of what took place there."

[From Northwestern Organizer, December 7, 1939]

"The brutal conduct of the Department of Justice is as senseless a blunder as Hoover committed when he drove the bonus army out of Washington."—From the Racine Day.

Said Labor, weekly organ of the railway brotherhoods:

"As practically everyone expected, a jury in the (Minneapolis) Federal court has returned a verdict of guilty in the conspiracy case involving 25 poor men and women accused of participation in the W. P. A. strike last summer. The jury was practically hand-picked. * * * Victor Anderson, United States district attorney, closed proceedings with an intemperate address in which he attempted to hang the 'red' label on the defendants * * *."

NEW DEAL OR NEW SLAVERY?

The viciousness of the persecution of innocent W. P. A. workers becomes more apparent as the number of indictments, especially those of women, increases.

What in effect happened was that the Government through the machinations of Republican Congressmen and Senators who delight in bringing misery and starvation to those who do useful work and are not parasites like themselves, decreed that there must be approximately three times as much work for less than the paltry $60.50 a month that previously had been received.

Against this the W. P. A. workers very justly protested. They protested as anyone with an ounce of red blood in their veins would have done.

If there are businessmen who snarl about the conduct of these W. P. A. workers, let us ask this question:

What would businessmen who furnish machinery or material for W. P. A. work have done if a law had been enacted ordering them to furnish three times as much material and machinery for W. P. A. projects for less money than they had previously received for one-third as much material and machinery as they must now furnish?

Would the patriotic businessmen have praised the Government for this action and made no protest? Would they have continued to furnish three times as much material and machinery for one-third as much money as previously?

Do you say this question is ridiculous and outrageous, Mr. Businessman? We agree with you. It is ridiculous and outrageous. But it is not as ridiculous and outrageous and mean as asking W. P. A. workers to do three times as much work for less pay than previously.

It isn't, Mr. Businessman, because you would have enough money tucked away so that you and your family did not starve because of this outrage and this injustice. Unfortunately, a family can't save on $60.50 a month.

And so when a law was passed to turn this Nation into a Nazi concentration camp, W. P. A. workers who were real Americans protested against this devilish outrage and they were supported in their protest by organized labor and every citizen who is opposed to slow death by starvation.

Continuing to spit out indictment is not frightening or overaweing anybody. It is just simply proving that there does not seem to be any end to how outrageous and unjust the W. P. A. administration can be in the persecution of innocent workers.

Please tell us, somebody, why it is wrong for businessmen to furnish three times as much material and machinery to the W. P. A. for less money than they formerly received for one-third as much material and machinery, and it is right for workers to be compelled to do three times as much work on W. P. A. for less pay than they formerly got for one-third as much work.

What is this that is happening in W. P. A.? Is it the New Deal or the new slavery? You can answer for yourself.

THEY ARE PERSECUTED FOR YOU

Every member of organized labor is urged to give liberally tag day to raise funds for defense of W. P. A. victims. These persecuted workers aided in protecting the wage scales and so the homes of all workers. They fought for you. Give for them at the C. L. U.-W. P. A. defense tag day, Friday-Saturday.

[From Minneapolis Labor Review of October 6, 1939]

DO UNTO THEM AS THEY HAVE DONE UNTO YOU

Every worker in Minneapolis owes a debt of gratitude to the men and women workers of the W. P. A. who have been so signally honored as to be indicted for protesting against the starvation pay and increased hours reactionary Republicans and tory Democrats wrote into the W. P. A.

That legislation is part of the scheme of the United States Chamber of Commerce to reduce the wage scales of all workers in the Nation.

So that when those W. P. A. workers, many of them members of the A. F. of L., made their protest they were not protesting just for themselves and their families but for all the workers in the Nation and all their families.

They were playing their part in a heroic way to prevent the workers of this Nation from being driven into serfdom.

Particularly should the splendid conduct of these workers who are indicted be appreciated here in Minneapolis. Minneapolis workers should make it a matter of pride to see that these indicted workers receive the best possible defense, a defense that will acquit them and vindicate them.

There are many indicted. The expense will be great. But compared to the hundreds of thousands of dollars these W. P. A. heroes saved for the rest of the workers in Minneapolis, to say nothing of the millions saved the workers of the Nation by preventing wage cuts, the cost of the most expensive defense imaginable would be infinitesimal.

Indeed, it would be nothing in comparison to the fortunes saved the other workers by preventing wage reductions.

Bear this in mind today and Saturday when you are asked to buy a tag. Make a liberal contribution. Remember the money that has been saved for you by those you are asked to assist and do unto them as they have done unto you.

[From Northwestern Organizer of January 1, 1940]

"There is only one way labor can attain success, and that is through its militancy. Right or wrong, I stand by these W. P. A. strikers," he stated to sustained applause.

Goldie likened the mass trial of 25 strike defendants to the Moscow trials. Stormy acclaim greeted his closing statement that: "So far as the labor movement is concerned, none of you defendants are felons. You are honored heroes."

FARMERS CONCERNED

John Wisdorf, president of the Farm-Cooperative-Labor Council, was hailed appreciatively when he voiced his sympathy with all the indicted strikers. Wisdorf stated that farmers were very much concerned lest the "conspiracy" charge under which the Minneapolis unemployed are being convicted be applied to farmers and farm organizations.

Picturesque Tom Davis, when it came his turn to speak, said "the trial of these cases has been a lesson to me." He blasted the corrupt daily press for poisoning public opinion about the unfortunate strikers.

Other attorneys active in the defense, and representatives of the labor press, were introduced to the diners.

YOU SAID IT, BROTHER

Few workers will disagree with the following statement of Bernard Tasser, American Federation of Labor publicity chief, on the W. P. A. strike, published in the July issue of the New York Central Trades and Labor Council:

"I have a very definite opinion relative to those persons, no matter how high their positions, who have tried to smear the building workers by calling their refusal to work 'a strike against the Government.'"

"I believe this opinion is identical with that of every union man in the country, and I am convinced that no worse blunder could ever be made by any public official than to try to outlaw the present highly effective peaceful protest stoppage of the building trades."

[North Dakota Union Farmer Supports W. P. A. Strike]

FARMERS BACK LABOR'S FIGHT ON W. P. A.

(The following editorial is reprinted from the July 17th issue of the North Dakota Union Farmer, leading organ of the Farmers Union):

What does all this hullabaloo about the 130 hours a month for W. P. A. workers mean? Why the strikes? That is what the farmers are wondering about.

Certainly asking a man to work 130 hours a month, or 32½ hours a week is not unreasonable—but the wages per month the W. P. A. worker will get remain exactly the same as when he worked about half that time.

Up until now W. P. A. workers have been paid the prevailing hourly wage which meant, in many trades, the union scale. But limited in the hours of work to a monthly "security wage" which was little enough for security.

Now they have to work many more hours for the same wage. Private employers will undoubtedly use the lower hourly wage of W. P. A. to batter down existing wage standards. As a result the purchasing power of nonrelief workers will be brought nearer to that of relief workers.

What does that mean to farmers who are already broken under the burden of a surplus because of underconsumption? It simply means more underconsumption and more surpluses of farm products and lower prices. It is to the farmers' own interest that they stand squarely with labor in vigorously protesting the inhuman relief measure passed by Congress.

Slashing hourly wage rates is just one of the inequitable features put in by the reactionary House Democrats. Another is the month's starvation period for W. P. A. employees after they have been on the job 18 months. A third is a decrease in the monthly wage, low enough now, in the Northern States. A fourth is reduction of the appropriation so that 2,000,000 instead of 3,000,000 will be employed by W. P. A., though there are still at least 11,000,000 persons out of work. A fifth is that after January 1, the States and municipalities will have to bear 25 percent of the cost, whether able or not.

Farmers fared quite well in securing appropriations for the various farm programs but if the city workers suffer, it will take even more Government assistance to make up for loss of the farmers' market.

F. B. I. INVESTIGATION IS OUTRAGEOUS SAYS THE DES MOINES FEDERATIONIST

LEGION CONDEMNS GLOTZBACH AND STOLTE—DENOUNCE LAW DEFIANCE W. P. A. CHIEFTAINS—WIDOWS AND ORPHANS OF VETERANS DECLARED VICTIMS OF THEIR LAWLESSNESS—BEARCAT POST GOES TO AID OFFICIALS' VICTIMS—ACTIONS GLOTZBACH AND STOLTE ARE BRANDED HIGH-HANDED AND ARBITRARY

High-handed and arbitrary action against widows and wives of veterans by W. P. A. Administrators Glotzbach and Stolte is bitterly condemned by the Bearcat Post of the American Legion.

This precious pair that have brought so much trouble to the workers of Minneapolis are charged with overriding the Federal civil-service laws to strike at the widows and wives of the heroes of the World War.

Glotzbach, the blatter for law and order, now condemned by the American Legion, is assailed as a defier of the law.

Widows and wives of veterans of the World War are protected by the provisions of the Federal civil service. But when you have to work for a living, apparently in the conception of Glotzbach and Stolte, the law does not protect you.

Condemning of this pair by the American Legion, it is hoped, may aid in opening the eyes of the public to the real aims and intentions of Glotzbach, the double-crosser of the late Floyd B. Olson, and his enthusiastic assistant, Stolte.

The resolution, unusual in its severity, coming from the conservative American Legion, it is hoped, may also open the eyes of the administration at Washington as to what enemies of the administration, the widows and daughters of veterans, and the veterans, this pair of bureaucrats drunk with power are.

The resolution follows. It was adopted at the meeting of Bearcat Post held August 11.

"Whereas both the Federal and State civil-service laws have granted to the widows of deceased veterans and to the wives of disabled veterans the same rights and privileges in the matter of employment as has been extended to all honorably discharged veterans; and

"Whereas many of the widows and wives of our deceased and disabled comrades are now employed by the Works Progress Administration on its various projects throughout Minnesota; and

"Whereas Administrators Glotzbach and Stolte, of the Minnesota W. P. A., have ruled that these widows and wives shall not enjoy the rights and privileges granted them under Federal and State statutes and has ruled that they must be separated from the positions under the 18-month lay-off rule now in force on the W. P. A.; and

"Whereas this is clearly a violation of the legal rights granted to such wives and widows of our unfortunate comrades: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, Minneapolis Bearcat Post, No 504, of the American Legion, Department of Minnesota, do hereby protest such high-handed and arbitrary action on the part of Administrators Glotzbach and Stolte, and demand that they adhere to the Federal statutes made and provided; further be it

"Resolved, That we demand that such portions of the lay-off order, which included the laying off of the widows and wives of our comrades, be rescinded."

[Northwestern Organizer says W. P. A. trials are political and unjust]

MAKING MOONEYS WHOLESALE

The New Republic wrote in its current issue:

"Minnesota is going ahead and making Saccos, Vanzettis, and Mooneys wholesale. Another 25 defendants have been found guilty of 'conspiracy' under the W. P. A. law. * * * As we said in our issue of November 8, the only real crime of which these people are guilty is that of protesting, like other W. P. A. workers all over the country, against the terrific reduction in W. P. A. wages on July 1. Any disturbance they created would be amply punished by a $5 fine. Instead, under a curious misuse of the W. P. A., which makes it an offense to interfere with the right of a relief worker to his job, the defendants are subject to a possible fine of $10,000 and 2 years in prison. Minnesotans admit this is a political trial, intended as a lesson to radicals. The chief lesson we see in it is that this is an extremely poor way to administer justice in a democracy."

Mr. LUNDEEN. The important question is, What is the background from which this unfortunate situation arose, and are we producing the kind of economic conditions that force needy people to stop work as a protest?

This situation arose out of the mistake in wiping out the prevailing wage rate on W. P. A., which had been the protection of organized labor for 50 years. It arose because Congress in 1939 began cutting the monthly wage rate of more than half the W. P. A. workers. The low-paid women on the sewing projects were cut eight to nine dollars a month out of their meager pay. What was the result of all this? All over the country on July 5 and 6, W. P. A. workers stopped work in protest against things that no American citizen should be compelled to endure.

These people were finally forced back to work with a statement, "Work at these substandard conditions or else starve." Is that the New Deal?

HOW THE 18-MONTH CLAUSE REALLY WORKS

Now, let us look at this marvelous idea—this 18-month clause. According to a report issued by Colonel Harrington, 775,000 W. P. A. workers were discharged last fall on the theory that if their jobs were taken away on W. P. A. they would somehow get private employment. Colonel Harrington reports that 2 to 3 months after these workers were fired from their W. P. A. jobs only 12.7 percent were able to secure employment in private industry. According to Colonel Harrington, this same number would have gotten jobs in private industry by the normal turn-over if the 18-month clause had not been adopted. Of those who got jobs in private industry, only one-half received as much wages as they had received on W. P. A. In other words, out of 775,000 W. P. A. workers discharged, only about 45,000 were receiving as much income as they had received on W. P. A. That is a fine certificate of credit for private industry. The rest of these figures should make us blush with shame. By November more than 50 percent of the discharged workers were again dependent on relief—about 380,000. About 25 percent of those fired managed to get back on W. P. A. The other 25 percent were on local relief rolls. Says Colonel Harrington in his report:

Large numbers were living on Federal surplus commodities because in many areas no local relief is available for employable cases.

Others, unable to find jobs or to secure public assistance, were dependent upon miscellaneous sources of income or were without any income whatever. The small earnings of secondary family members, aid received by other members of the family, the assistance of friends and relatives—these means had to suffice to support large numbers of separated workers. Approximately 100,000 of all those cut off received no income during the 2 weeks before they were interviewed. Some were living on savings from earlier short-lived jobs or on credit extended by grocers; others were forced to sell personal property or even to beg for left-over and unsalable food.

SURPLUS COMMODITIES NOT A SUBSTITUTE FOR 18-MONTH CLAUSE

Colonel Harrington's report states that "in many southern cities scarcely any workers who lost their W. P. A. jobs were getting local aid even of an emergency character. In these areas surplus commodities, distributed by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, constituted the only relief course of any significance."

What does "surplus commodities" mean? Well, it means exactly 1 cent per meal per person. I have been so informed according to a statement of one of the ranking officers of the Surplus Commodities Corporation. In other words, those of us who voted to throw these needy citizens off their W. P. A. jobs were voting, in effect, to compel them to live on 1 cent per meal. Is there any Member of this Senate who can stand here and defend that action? This situation also existed in some parts of the North. The report of Colonel Harrington continues:

For example, in Omaha, where 16 percent of the families reported surplus commodities as their major source of income, the only commodities distributed during November were flour, apples, and onions.

This calls to mind the old saying, "An apple a day keeps the doctor away, but an onion a day keeps everybody away." One housewife says: "We got flour, but what good is the flour without lard or baking powder? You can't eat flour raw. We got 5 pounds of dried beans, but I had to get a piece of meat to grease them with."

Here is what a man writes about his story: "The first month was not so bad. I held back the rent and used my last W. P. A. pay check on groceries and other necessities. The second month I could not pay the rent and used my credit for groceries and had to borrow from my friends. This last month I have been forced to the wall. My friends are beginning to avoid me; my creditors have closed in on me; I have been forced to break up my home, give up my children, and sell my furniture."

This has not affected only the W. P. A. workers. Colonel Harrington quotes a report from Texas which states:

The inability of W. P. A. workers to make regular payments on their bills has greatly reduced the income of the merchant.

In Omaha, again, we are told 1 family in every 19 reporting no regular income has resorted to canvassing markets, bakeries, and restaurants for left-over and unsalable food.

The breaking up of families due to these W. P. A. discharges was widespread, Colonel Harrington reports. In other words, we in this Senate who like to make glorious speeches to our constituents about the preservation of the American family have, by callous, cruel, and unthinking action, actually been helping to break up the American family. What effect has this had on the operation of the W. P. A. projects? The report says:

State administrators have reported that the immediate effect of the 18-month requirements was to increase administrative work and to reduce project efficiency * * * these enforced lay-offs may endanger some of the gains in project efficiency attained as a result of many months of steady effort.

I could go on for perhaps a long time telling you of the heartrending stories of misery and suffering caused by this 18-month clause, and yet it is interesting to note that a few days ago in this Senate a Member moved for immediate wiping out of this 18-month clause. We saw this generous action blocked by the administration.

MONTHLY WAGES CUT TO SUBSTANDARD LEVEL.

Let me go on to the monthly wage aspect of our action in the last session. Congress passed a provision for readjustment of the wage scales in order to bring wages in different parts of the country more in line with the differences in the cost of living. One of the purposes of this provision which I heartily endorse was the lifting of the W. P. A. wages in the South. But what happened in addition to that? In thousands of communities in the East and North, in many of the States represented by Senators here, the monthly wages of the low-paid workers, the laborers, was cut five to six dollars a month. Thus many people who were earning the glorious sum of $57 a month were reduced to $52.

Those in the cities over 100,000, who had been earning $60 a month, or $14 a week, were cut by a generous administration to $57.20. Somehow I wonder how that 20 cents got in. But the New Deal administration did not stop here in its generosity. It examined the question of what to do for women, the bearers and guardians of our future generation. The New Deal administration remembered that many enlightened States have adopted laws for the protection of women in industry. So this administration decided to single out the women employed on W. P. A. for special attention. And so they placed these women, or at least the overwhelming majority of them, in a special "B" classification, and reduced their wages from $8 to $9 a month. And so these women throughout the country, coming home to their fatherless children, with their wages cut 15 to 20 percent, can give their story when the children ask for milk: "You see, children, this is the abundance of the Congress and the administration."

W. P. A. WORKERS UNABLE TO COLLECT EVEN THEIR REDUCED PAY

I have recently been interested in knowing whether the W. P. A. workers get every month at least this miserable security wage. I have been struck by the situation which has recently occurred, a situation that I think has not yet been brought to light. In many parts of the country, even including the South, projects were unable to operate in many cases for a period of weeks, due to the cold wave. In the situations affecting many hundreds of thousands of W. P. A. workers, the workers could not even get their security wage.

In some cases the projects were closed for 2 weeks, 3 weeks, a month. The workers were told that all they could do was to "make up the time at some future date." I know that within the last few weeks an appeal was made to President Roosevelt and to Colonel Harrington to step into the picture and do something to alleviate the distress to these employees of the Federal Government. What was the answer? W. P. A. could do nothing but just permit them to make up the time in the future, maybe 2, or 3, or 4 months hence.

It is true that surplus commodities were offered to these hungry employees of the Federal Government, but these commodities were offered in emergency situations and then on the basis of the generous additional allowance of one-half cent per person per meal. Let us look at this for a moment. Here are needy people on W. P. A. They have passed a relief test proving that they have no other resources. Cold weather comes, thus increasing their need for food, clothing, and shelter. What does a generous Government do? It says that in cases of real emergency it will increase their surplus-commodity allowance from 1 cent a meal per person to 1½ cents per meal. This is not Russia. This is not Germany. This is not Mussolini's Italy. This is not India, or even China, or Japan. This is America under the New Deal.

I want to touch again on this question of the 130-hour month. As we know, we lengthened the hours of labor for W. P. A. workers, cutting out the prevailing wages, and this was one of the causes of the protest strikes which I have referred to in this Glotzbach matter. There have been two interesting results of this 130-hour month. The first result is that it prevents W. P. A. workers from fully making up their time lost because the projects do not operate or because of illness. It is my belief that if we are going to keep the 130-hour month we ought to guarantee the payment every month at least of that miserable security wage, if the worker is prevented from working through no fault of his own. There has been a second result which Members of this Senate should know. We are all interested in having the W. P. A. workers get their share of private employment, yet I want to know how they are going to do it if they work 130 hours a month, and in many cases spend another 60 hours a month in going to and from the job.

ADMINISTRATION IS TO BLAME FOR DISTURBANCES ON WORK PROJECTS

What I have attempted to do here is to show the gentlemen of this House what some of the effects were of the bill we passed last summer. Here we have fired hundreds of thousands of workers on the 18-month clause and caused them endless suffering. We took away their prevailing wages, we cut their monthly wages, we prevent them from even earning the miserable monthly wage, and yet we wonder why there has been disturbances on the projects. I say that if there have been troubles on the projects the administration is responsible because of the blundering treatment of this problem.

NEW RECESSION UNDER WAY

But some of you will say that these problems are small; that we should deal with larger problems of our economic situation. Let us look at them. Today our Nation is entering a new recession. The war boom, which stirred so many to believe that the depression is over, has now collapsed. The Federal Reserve Board index of production, which was 128 in December 1939, is now down to 112. There are predictions that it will touch 100 before it is over. This would mean that the index would be back to exactly where it was in July 1939, and that over 1,000,000 workers who recently got jobs will be fired. As a matter of fact, with 600,000 new job seekers entering the market, we will have 600,000 more unemployed than before the boom started. This will probably bring our total unemployment up to more than 11,000,000.

Here is the calculation: In July 1929 there were 36,700,000 employed in nonagricultural industries. There were 2,000,000 unemployed, or a total of 38,700,000 available workers. By July 1940, 6,600,000 new workers will have entered the job market in the ensuing 11 years. This makes a total of 45,300,000 available workers in the nonagricultural industries.

By July 1940 it is probable that total employment in the industries will not be larger than 33,500,000. This would leave a total unemployment well over 11,000,000.

Now, it would seem as a matter of common sense, with this storm rushing toward us, that we put up an umbrella. Increased purchasing power in the hands of the masses of people might help to avert the effect of this recession. Yet what do we plan to do? On the basis of the appropriation passed by this Congress last summer, W. P. A. will be laying off 800,000 workers between now and the 30th of June. And if we pass only the $1,000,000,000, as requested by the President, another 300,000 will be discharged between July and September. In other words, instead of doing the sensible thing of putting up an umbrella, we are going to go out and get ourselves drenched to the skins. Instead of increasing purchasing power at a time when private employment will be decreasing, we plan to fire over 1,100,000. We plan to stop their pay checks from going into the hands of merchants, landlords, farmers. I ask Senators is this common sense?

ARMAMENT EXPENDITURES DO NOT OFFSET SEVERE W. P. A. CUT

Well, some say part of this cut in W. P. A. will be offset by armament expenditures. But will it? Any Government economist can tell you two things about W. P. A. and about armament expenditures. He can tell you that the W. P. A. dollar is the fastest moving dollar in the country; in other words, it produces the greatest net return in trade, purchasing power, and employment. He will tell you also that the armament dollar is the most sterile dollar in the country. It produces the fewest number of jobs; it produces the greatest profits. These profits often amount to 30 percent or more of the total outlay of the Government. It is doubtful in the next 4 or 5 months if armament expenditures will give employment to more than 100,000 of the 1,100,000 people who will be discharged from W. P. A. At the same time, also, we will be cutting farm security, N. Y. A., and C. C. C. expenditures. Before we build up these piles of armaments at the expense of the needy people of this country, let us give thought of who is to man the armaments. A survey of the National Youth Administration showed that in underprivileged families the health of 43 percent of the youth was so impaired that they probably would be rejected for employment by private industry. Obviously then, they would also be rejected by our armed forces.

Today Government economists could tell us that the only thing that prevents this recession from becoming a full-fledged collapse, as took place in 1937, is our export trade. This trade, as I will show, is composed largely today of war materials. It is interesting to raise the question of what would happen if England and France were to decide along about May or June that they would have to stop their purchases on a cash-and-carry basis and demand credit and ships. In the face of our weakened domestic situation, would they not be in a position to exert a great deal of leverage to force us to abandon the cash-and-carry plan? What I am trying to point out here is that the policy we are now pursuing is not only endangering the lives and welfare of our own people but it is endangering our peace as well.

When I deal with the pitiful provisions in the Relief Act passed last summer, I am trying to show its effect upon the whole life of this Nation.

I think it is about time we stop deluding ourselves and the people on this question of aid to the unemployed. We have seen three recovery waves dashed on the rocks of stupidity and selfishness. Are we going to continue to play around with this problem for 10 years more? Will the people stand for our experimenting around with it for 10 years more? It is about time we realized that we cannot preserve either our peace, our democracy, or liberties by starving fifteen to twenty million men, women, and children. We have to devise a program that is going to provide work and security for the American people at peacetime and not wartime pursuits. We have to stop these makeshift W. P. A. appropriations to last for 6 or 7 months or a year, and plan a works program to build schools, as well as battleships, hospitals as well as guns, roads and libraries and rural improvements as well as ammunition. We have to give our youth something to look forward to except poverty or war.

We have to provide a real works program to give real jobs, real work, and real wages. And then we will not have the kind of situation that occurred in Minneapolis and in other parts of the country.

I wish to recall the fact that we had a very fine gentleman at the head of this activity in Minnesota a while ago, a former Representative in Congress, Mr. Christgau. There was no objection to him personally; he was a fine man, but the policy he pursued was such that he was forced out of that office by labor in Minnesota. In spite of the fact that those above him said they would not discharge him, he was discharged, and, unless the gentlemen whose nominations are now before the Senate and which I assume are about to be confirmed, take a leaf from that record and mend their ways, they may find that the power of labor still exists in Minnesota.

Such a situation existed there that less than living wages were paid, and then many workers were thrown off and could not get back on the rolls. Then, of course, conditions became worse instead of better. Their protests were not heeded. You may call it a strike or a protest, or whatever you like, but I call attention to the fact that the court in this case made the statement—I think Senators saw the opinion, and I ask to have that portion of the instructions to the jury inserted in the Record—that these men had a right to protest and had a right to strike against these conditions, of course not using any violence or committing any overt acts; but they had a right to gather for protest and to strike and to picket and to urge others to join them, so long as it was a peaceful procedure and without overt acts or force.

This may well be the beginning—I would it were the end—of other instances like this. In a number of other States the same thing occurred, perhaps on a little smaller scale in some other States. Some of the clippings which I have inserted in the Record prove that statement.

I ask to have inserted in the Record at this point part of the instructions of the court to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the extracts referred to will be inserted in the Record.

The matter referred to is as follows:

RIGHT TO STRIKE, AS STATED BY JUDGE JOYCE

Judge Joyce, in his charge to the jury, plainly stated that the defendants had a right to strike against the Government. On October 16, 1939, at 3:45, Judge Joyce, in his charge to the jury which sat in the case of the United States of America v. Myron A. Phillips, John Marshal, Leslie Wachter, Arnold Mullen, Ben Palmer, Carl Pemble, Richard L. Connell, and Gordon T. Smith, also known as Gordon Peterson, on page 27, said:

"They (the defendants) had a right to quit work and they had a right to strike and to protest conditions which to them appeared unjust or oppressive, and by peaceful and proper means to seek others to join them in protest and to support their cause by stopping work; and in furthering their efforts they had a right to indulge in peaceful picketing. Modern and enlightened laws enacted by Congress and interpreted by the courts have long since recognized such rights as existing."

Mind you, it was not Tom Davis, one of the defense attorneys; it was not one of the defendants who uttered that statement, but it was the Federal judge of the United States District Court of the Fourth Division, District of Minnesota, who said that these defendants had a right to strike.

On October 19, 1939, 1:30 p. m., on page 14, Judge Joyce once more stated that these workers had a right to strike when he delivered his charge to the jury sitting in the case of The United States of America v. William Reiley, Milton McLean, Charles R. Moore, and Charles Connors.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. LUNDEEN. I shall be very happy to have the Senator read from the instructions to the jury.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator, in reading the other day before the committee, read down to the word "existing." I asked that there might go in the committee record, and I now ask that there may go in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the matter coming immediately after that which has just been put in the RECORD by the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Am I to understand that this extract is to follow the other extracts from the instructions to the jury?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes. I will read the matter to which I refer:

But the rights just enumerated gave no basis for nor accorded to no person or persons the right to resort to intimidation, threats, force, or violence, or the doing of any other act prohibited by law, resorted to for the purpose of enforcing or compelling a yielding to his or their demands. One may avail himself of any peaceful and lawful means to better his condition or the condition of others with whom he believes he possesses interests in common.

Mr. LUNDEEN. That, of course, does not conflict with the original statement I made. It merely amplifies it, and I think it is in line with the statement I made.

I should like to mention this fact: The great American Congress will have to deal with labor on W. P. A. in a slightly different manner than we did under the law which was passed, unless we wish to have more protests and more difficulties, because these men and their families were forced into destitution and poverty such as cannot be described on this floor.

With the permission of the Senate, at a later time, I shall take opportunity to do so at a more favorable hour.

I believe that the voice of labor should be heeded. When they gather in conventions or pass resolutions, they should be inserted in the RECORD of the Congress for the information of Senators, and we should act favorably upon them. I hope the time may soon come when we will pass laws along this line so that there will be no objection, protest, and strikes.

I cannot understand how the administration is willing to send here the names of men who follow a policy hostile to labor. They built up a background which is hostility itself to the best interests of these men who were in W. P. A., and who were forced on the rolls by circumstances over which they had no control.

In this connection I may say that the business index is not favorable. It indicates a further depression; and men by the hundreds of thousands will be thrown off these rolls in the near future. I have stated that in some cases men were thrown off the rolls and were given as little as 1 cent per meal per day, and then they finally received an increase of one-half cent, so that it made the total a cent and a half per meal per day. I do not know that I should amplify that statement. I think it speaks for itself.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I do.

Mr. WILEY. I have listened to the remarks of the Senator. I should like to know just what these two gentlemen have been guilty of that would disqualify them for the positions to which they have been nominated. I do not understand just what they have done.

Mr. LUNDEEN. They have not been accused of any crime, so far as I know. They pursued toward labor a policy which brought about protests and strikes. They appeared at the trial and testified against labor, so that they brought upon themselves the protests and objections to their confirmation which I have here, from William Green, the Minnesota State Federation of Labor, the Central Labor Union, the Labor Review of Minneapolis, the publication called Labor—the organ of the railway brotherhoods here—and many other newspapers and periodicals. It was more a policy pursued than any specific thing, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. President, I include here two editorials bearing on this most important question.

THREE MILLION STARVING AS W. P. A. CUT RESULT

WASHINGTON.—How the millions dropped from relief rolls last summer are living was revealed this week by Col. Francis C. Harrington, W. P. A. Administrator, in a report showing what happened to 775,000 families, representing more than 3,000,000 such cases.

This purge was made compulsory by the last relief-appropriation bill, which contained the so-called Woodrum amendments. One stipulated that all persons who had been on W. P. A. rolls 18 months should be turned adrift.

Of the 775,000 persons laid off, 675,000 are still without jobs. Many of them are almost without food.

Families whose breadwinners were not reassigned to W. P. A. jobs have been compelled to exist on an average income of $3.23 a week. More than 20 percent have no income whatever. Some are helped by relatives, others are begging for unsalable food, still others are foraging in garbage pails. Some have died because they did not have medical care.

Children have been kept out of school for lack of food and clothing. Insurance policies have lapsed, household equipment and personal belongings have gone to pawnbrokers. Gas and electricity have been shut off and scraps of food were substituted for fuel. Many families have been evicted.

The Social Security Board disclosed that the average weekly grant to 6,668,000 persons on direct relief is $5.45 a month.

Congressman CLIFTON A. WOODRUM (Democrat, Virginia) has pledged a majority of the House committee handling relief bills not to vote for a penny more than $1,000,000,000 for relief this year.

That means, according to Colonel Harrington, that 775,000 additional families will be on their own after April next.

The Agricultural appropriation bill, reported by the House Appropriations Committee this week, carries about $500,000,000 less than was voted a year ago.

MINNEAPOLIS OUTRAGE

The Justice Department did the only sane thing to do in dismissing the remaining charges against 125 Minneapolis W. P. A. strikers. If this action reflects the policy of the new Attorney General, Robert Jackson, well and good.

But even if it does, it cannot alter the shabby—yes; the reactionary—role of the New Deal in this case. And the sentences dished out by Federal Judge Joyce, ranging up to 8 months in prison for the previously convicted "ringleaders," shows that the quality of his mercy is strained but too well.

The fact that only the militant Minneapolis strikers were singled out for prosecution, when the strike was Nation-wide and especially strong in Minnesota, New York, and Illinois, indicates something phoney about the whole business.

And the speech in which Assistant Attorney General Rogge asked for the dismissals, saying that "the President felt . . . that the lesson had been learned, that the object sought had been attained," was a new way of requesting light sentences (which failed to materialize) as well as a new depth in condescension.

The whole sordid picture—the New Deal's weakening before the drive against W. P. A. and relief, the inhuman Woodrum amendments, the strike, the vicious police attacks on pickets, Roosevelt's "you can't strike against the Government" edict, the arrests, the drumming up of the cases, the fantastic charges of "conspiracy," the trial before an antilabor jury of small-business men and farmers—all this is a tragic token of what goes on here.

Together with the antitrust prosecutions, the increase in armaments, the cuts in relief, the talk of balancing the Budget, the hints of "emergency" powers, the slashes in farm subsidies and social services—it forms the pattern of the New Deal's "new" line for the masses: Business first.

That is Roosevelt's answer to labor and labor's friends who saw in him the great messiah who would lead us to the promised land.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, all that Mr. Stolte and Mr. Glotzbach did was to carry out the instructions which Colonel Harrington gave them in reference to the execution of the law. I do not think anything else was done. Colonel Harrington appeared before the committee and said that at all times these two gentlemen were acting under his instructions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Linus C. Glotzbach to be regional director, region VII, Work Projects Administration? [Putting the question:] The "ayes" have it, and the nomination is confirmed.

The question now is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of S. L. Stolte to be Work Projects Administrator for Minnesota? [Putting the question:] The "ayes" have it, and the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the fact that it is expected that the Senate will adjourn until Thursday, and may then adjourn until the following Monday, depending on the state of the calendar, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of these two nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate adjourn until Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, February 22, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate Monday, February 19, 1940

WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATION

Linus C. Glotzbach, to be regional director, Work Projects Administration, for region VII.

S. L. Stolte, to be Work Projects Administrator for Minnesota.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

Philip B. Fleming, to be Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division, Department of Labor.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS

Joseph T. Sylvester, to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 1, with headquarters at Portland, Maine.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O heavenly Father, Giver of peace and rest to all mankind, look down upon Thy children. We pray that our labors may be great in their reality and appealing in their understanding. May we learn from the glory of our ancient faith the sacredness of life, the duty and the joy of righteous speech; thus may we reflect the holy life of Him whom we worship. We pray for faith triumphant even as the world is carrying in its breast the gushing fountain of poisonous hate, give us an increasing certainty that all things work together for good to them that love God. As we bravely face life with its countless distractions, crown us with an unfailing and unwithering strength of our holy religion. We praise Thee that neither height nor depth, nor any other creature can separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. Inspire us to adorn the House of Life with those fidelities which are the foretaste of the life eternal, in our Saviour's name, in love and mercy be Thou with our dear Speaker and the Congress and may no plague come nigh their dwelling places. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, February 16, 1940, was read and approved.

INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT-ELECT ON JANUARY 20, 1941

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 32, the Chair appoints the following Members on the joint committee to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the president-elect on January 20, 1941:

Mr. RAYBURN, of Texas, Mr. DOUGHTON, of North Carolina, and Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the order of the House of February 8, 1940, the Chair designates the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER], to read Washington's Farewell Address on February 22 next.

HON. J. H. (CYCLONE) DAVIS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time to announce the death of a former very able and distinguished Member of this House, the Honorable J. H. (Cyclone) Davis, who served in this body in 1914-16 as Congressman at Large from Texas.

Judge Davis passed away January 31, 1940, at his home in Kaufman, Tex., following a lingering illness of 2 years.

Hon. James Harvey Davis was born in Pickens District, S. C., December 24, 1852, the son of W. B. and Salina Moore Davis, and came with his parents in early childhood to Winnsboro, Tex., where he lived until he attained manhood. Soon after his marriage to Miss Belle Barton, born in Bellview, Rusk County, Tex., December 1, 1853, the daughter of Col. James Mattison Barton and Emily Miller Barton, he with his bride became citizens of Mount Vernon, Tex., where he lived until 1892, at which time they moved to Sulphur Springs, Tex. With the exception of the 2-year residence in Washington, D. C., when Judge Davis was serving in Congress, he remained a resident of Sulphur Springs until 2 years before his death. Interment was made in the City Cemetery at Sulphur Springs, by the side of his first wife, Mrs. Belle Barton Davis, who died September 7, 1934.

The first bill ever to be introduced in Congress providing for drafting money the same as men in the event of war was introduced by Judge Davis during his service in Congress. The bill was introduced after many conferences with the then Secretary of War, the Honorable Newton Baker.

During his entire life he was a crusader for the poor, the weak, and the unfortunate. For this reason he was never a rich man in this world's goods, but he built a life that will be remembered long after riches would have been forgotten. He did not receive the credit that he was justly entitled to receive for helping to initiate and sell to the country many progressive and humane measures that have been adopted in recent years. But the people who knew him will not forget the many and great contributions that he made in their interest and for their welfare.

I am inserting herewith an Associated Press article that appeared in the newspapers of the Nation soon after his death which discloses his interesting career:

KAUFMAN, TEX., January 31.—J. H. (Cyclone) Davis, 85, one-time Texas Congressman at Large, and prohibition leader, died here Wednesday.

The bearded, widely-known politician lately had interested himself in old-age pension questions.

Survivors include his widow and four sons, Arlon B. (Cyclone) Davis, of Dallas; Valtan Davis and Roy Davis, of Sulphur Springs; and Landon Davis, of Hamlin; and a brother, Dr. Jeff Davis, of Roby.

It was in the Populist movement that blanketed the agrarian sections of the country in the decade before the turn of the century that Cyclone Davis attained his greatest prominence. He was one of the founders of the group that split from the old parties and grew into the Populist Party.

Davis, with evangelical zeal and burning oratory, threw himself into the movement that placed an aggressive bloc in Congress.

Davis won the brevet, "Cyclone," afterward made a part of his legal name, in upholding a cause of the farmers. In March 1894 he debated the question at issue with Watt Hardin, attorney general of Kentucky, in that State's capitol, and was described in a newspaper story as "a cyclone from Texas."

For years thereafter "the Honorable Cyclone Davis of Texas" was food for the impish humor of Dana's New York Sun, along with Simpson, "the sockless Socrates of Medicine Lodge."

Davis was brought to Texas when 2 years old by his parents, W. B. and Elma Davis, from South Carolina, where he was born December 24, 1853. He was educated in the district or "common" schools, as he defined them, and taught school 5 years, beginning at 21.

In 1879, when 26, he was licensed to practice law and, as county judge of Franklin County during the administration of Governor Roberts, was said to be the youngest man on the bench in Texas. He practiced law 20 years and published a newspaper 17 years. In the latter capacity he was one of the founders of the Texas Press Association and one of its early presidents.

Davis interested himself in politics at an early age, joining the old Grange when 19, and for many years was one of the leaders of farmers' movements. In 1884 Davis and a group of other friends of Thomas A. Hendricks won wide publicity at the Democratic National Convention for their "slinging bandanna" handkerchiefs, and the tall, bearded Texan clung to that symbol of the proletariat throughout his life. The convention of 1884 nominated Grover Cleveland and Hendricks, the first Democratic Presidential ticket elected since the Civil War.

Since 1934 Davis had been the only survivor of a group of 70 prominent workers in behalf of the election of William J. Bryan in the Presidential campaign of 1900.

The only public office Davis held outside his home region was Representative at Large in the Sixty-fourth and Sixty-fifth Congresses.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE AND THE DIESEL ENGINE

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, there is on the high seas at the present time the fastest freighter that ever sailed from a United States port flying the American flag. Known as the Mormacpenn, the ship is propelled by four 7-cylinder 2-cycle Busch-Sulzer Diesel engines and develops 9,000 horsepower. The engines were constructed by the Busch-Sulzer Diesel Engine Co., of St. Louis, the pioneers in the development of Diesel engines in this country.

Naturally the engines are the latest type of Diesels. The cost to the corporation of developing this engine was tremendous, requiring research work over a period of many years.

I have contended for years this country erred in not installing Diesel engines not only in its merchant marine but also in Navy ships and Army transports. It is said the German pocket battleships have engines somewhat similar in design to those of the Mormacpenn. Not only is it possible now to use the cheapest oil due to improvements, but the ship can fuel in New York and travel around the world without refueling. Economically Diesels operate much below the cost of the turbine-propelled vessel.

In its recent trials the Mormacpenn reached a speed of approximately 19½ knots, almost 2 knots above requirements. The ship will operate between New York and South American ports, is of 17,500 tons displacement, 492 feet in length, a cargo capacity of 690,000 cubic feet, 30,000 cubic feet being refrigerated. It is essentially a cargo vessel, but the ship contains four large staterooms that will accommodate eight passengers. The few passengers will be required to eat with the officers, there being no public rooms on the ship.

The Mormacpenn will reach Pernambuco in 9 days, Bahia in 10 days, Santos in 14 days, and Rio Grande do Sul in 17 days, arriving at Buenos Aires in 19 days. This is allowing time in each port for discharge and loading cargo. In the past our slow freighters handicapped our efforts to get South American trade, but thanks to the Maritime Commission's building program, many speedy cargo ships are now in the making.

The vessel is so constructed as to provide speedy conversion into a naval auxiliary in the event of war.

The multiengine geared Diesel design installed in the Mormacpenn lends itself to economical and safe operation more than any other type of ship propulsion, as it gives a wide range of ship speeds with machinery operating at most efficient power. In the case of a turbine vessel or a single direct-connected Diesel, fuel economy is seriously affected when the vessel has to run at slow speed. Also this design permits and assists readiness to stop and back at full power, whereas the turbine vessel has less than 50 percent power astern. This design permits faster and safer maneuvering than does any other type.

Now, as to relative first cost. For years here in America there has been a greatly advertised antifactual propaganda spread around by some of the shipyards and other far-from-biased "authorities" that the first cost of a motorship was so much greater than that of a turbine vessel as to completely destroy the advantages of the former insofar as operating economy was concerned. This has been several times disproved by actual bids. There have been instances when yards have bid both ways—turbine versus Diesel—and in which the motorship price was larger than that of the steamer by more than the bid price of the Diesel engines. Such bids did not always come from yards equipped for building their own turbines, boilers, and so forth. Yards equipped to build steam machinery have a very good reason for preferring to build a steamer, as the latter permits productive use of expensive plant equipment which would be idle were the yard to have to buy Diesel engines.

The only yard at present equipped to build Diesels has frequently bid turbine or Diesel drive at the same price; at times it has bid lower for motorship construction.

In carrying out its building program for furnishing the large number of greatly needed American merchant vessels of several classes, types, and sizes, the Maritime Commission wisely decided to develop modern ships of Diesel as well as turbine propulsion. I here quote a paragraph from an article prepared by Admiral Land, Chairman of the Maritime Commission, for publication in the August 1939 Marine Engineering and Shipping Review:

There are two major contributions by the Commission to the technical development of the shipbuilding industry. One is the high-pressure, high-temperature steam turbine power plant which is being experimentally installed in one of the Commission's C-3 type vessels. The other is not so much a development as a recognition—a recognition of the value and feasibility of the Diesel engine in all kinds of American merchant vessels. Before the Maritime Commission's building program got under way Diesel installations in this country were relatively few. Shipbuilders were equipped to build steam turbine ships. They had been building them for many years and saw no reason why they should humor the occasional ship operator who preferred the efficiency or the cleanliness of the Diesel.

As Admiral Land says, the Diesel engine has finally been recognized. This recognition has been a long time on the way, but powerful interests from a selfish standpoint have left nothing undone to defeat efforts to advance the Diesel. History of ship construction shows the success that resulted from their campaigns, but by actual performance I predict the Diesel will demonstrate it is superior from every standpoint.

I have addressed myself on this subject several times in the past, my first remarks being made 10 years ago.

I sought recognition for the Diesel over this period and was bitterly disappointed when the three new ships for the Panama Line, a Government-owned corporation, were constructed. It so happened that I was responsible for the construction of those ships. I sailed on two of the old Panama Line ships, used as cargo ships during the construction of the Panama Canal and reconstructed as cargo passenger ships after the Canal was completed. They had outlived their usefulness, were extremely slow, but so constructed as to be able to weather a severe storm, many of which they had encountered in their years of service. In talking to the captains of the ships and also to the Governor of the Canal Zone, I learned there was a special replacement fund in the Treasury amounting to several millions of dollars that could only be used to replace these ships.

On my return to Washington I contacted the President. During our conversation I could see he doubted that I knew what I was talking about when I told him I found money in the Treasury that could only be allocated for ship construction. He promised to investigate and shortly thereafter he wrote me and advised he had ordered the ships replaced with money from this special fund which he found as I told him he would. Knowing the President's interest in ships I talked to him about installing Diesel engines in the new vessels. A private naval architect was employed and in the end the old turbine lobby again used its influence with the result that turbines rather than Diesels propelled the ships.

HISTORY OF THE DIESEL ENGINE

After 17 years of study and experimentation Dr. Rudolph Diesel, of Munich, Germany, in 1897, completed a successful new type of power-producing engine with a higher thermal efficiency than any other type that has been produced before or since.

In collaboration with the engineers of Krupp, and Augsburg Machine Works, of Germany, Sulzer Bros., of Switzerland, and Mr. Adolphus Busch, of St. Louis, Dr. Diesel developed the commercial engine that bears his name. Although the outstanding advantages of this new type of power-producing engine were at once recognized, it took about 10 years to introduce the Diesel in small sizes and another 10 years for it to gain a position as a serious competitor of steam engines, which had become well established as the accepted type of power plant.

During the past 40 years the Diesel engine has been thoroughly tried out in both stationary and marine service, and has shown a thermal efficiency which has never been approached by any other type of heat engine. In the average steam plant less than 15 percent of the heat energy contained in fuel is converted into mechanical energy; in the largest and most modern steam plants less than 25 percent of the heat energy contained in fuel is converted into mechanical energy; while in the Diesel engine, with utilization of waste heat in cooling water and exhaust gases, over 40 percent of the heat energy contained in the fuel is converted into mechanical energy.

In those countries in Europe where cheap fuel is not available, stationary Diesel engine power plants have been widely installed. Chile has an interconnected Diesel power plant system of over 40,000 horsepower. In Shanghai, China, is a 37,000 horsepower stationary Diesel plant.

But the greatest adoption of the Diesel engine has been for the propulsion of ships which must carry their own fuel. As the Diesel burns less fuel than steam engines with the same amount of fuel bunker, the ship can carry more cargo or can purchase fuel in the port of call where fuel is cheapest in price and bunker sufficient for the round voyage. Also the Diesel propelling engine takes up less space than the steam plant. It requires no warming up, while a steam plant must be slowly fired several hours before being placed in operation. Again the simple Diesel engine is self-contained, without such extensive auxiliary apparatus as steam boilers and condensers that are necessary for the steam engine, and therefore the Diesel propelling plant requires a smaller operating crew.

With the trend toward high-speed ocean transportation the cost of fuel has become an ever-increasing part of the cost of ship operation, and because of its greater efficiency and lower consumption of fuel the Diesel has to a great degree superseded steam for the propulsion of medium-size ocean-going passenger and cargo ships.

The unit size of Diesel engines has been rapidly increased. Some German cruisers are fitted with a Diesel plant. Superliners, requiring from 100,000 to 150,000 horsepower, are fitted with steam turbines, although it appears possible that at no distant date Diesels will be developed for even such size plants.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE AMERICAN DIESEL ENGINE

It was a St. Louisian, the late Mr. Adolphus Busch, who was directly responsible for the advent of the American Diesel-engine industry.

It was Mr. Busch who purchased from Dr. Diesel in 1897 exclusive rights to the Diesel engine for the United States and Canada. He built at St. Louis in 1898 the first Diesel in the world to be placed in commercial service. From 1898 until the expiration of his basic Diesel patents in 1911 Mr. Busch pioneered alone in Diesel building in America, building several hundred stationary engines for installation in public-utility and industrial plants.

Dr. Diesel, from 1898 until his death in 1913, continued—as advisory engineer, director, and stockholder—his close association with the Busch enterprise, the only American industry in which Dr. Diesel ever participated, or with which he ever cooperated.

After the expiration of the basic Diesel patents other American manufacturers began building Diesel engines, until today there are over 50 American Diesel builders. The leading American firms have made arrangements for collaboration with leading European firms, especially in late years, when the more general adoption of the Diesel abroad has resulted in revolutionary development of new types of improved design and higher efficiency.

Mainly due to the abundance of cheap coal in this country, the Diesel was not so rapidly adopted for stationary power plants as it was in other countries.

In the United States there are now thousands of public-utility Diesel power plants.

One outstanding feature of the Diesel engine is that it eliminates smoke and ashes and requires only a small water supply.

Oil fuel has taken the place of coal in many sections of the world, and almost entirely is this true in speaking of vessels constructed by the leading maritime nations. Foreign countries long since saw the wisdom of installing Diesel engines in their ships, but it was not until the Maritime Commission came into being that the Diesel received any reasonable recognition in this country. Successful operation of the many ships now under construction in this country that will be propelled by Diesels will in the end compel this country as well as private shipowners when constructing ships to install nothing but Diesel engines.

There is in the making at the present time plans and specifications for the construction of an Army transport. I have already called to the attention of the Secretary of War the successful operation of the Diesel engine. This transport on every trip will pass through the Panama Canal and cross the Pacific. From the standpoint of economy in operation, the War Department will be more than justified in insisting Diesel engines be installed in this vessel. With large corporations constructing Diesel engines in every section of the country, competition in bidding is assured.

In a recent statement before the Senate Appropriations Committee, Admiral Emory S. Land, chairman of the United States Maritime Commission, said in part:

The Maritime Commission is seeking to restore the American merchant fleet to its earlier vigor. This in substance, it was directed to do by the Congress. Looking toward that end, it has undertaken a long-range construction program, also at the direction of the Congress. The fundamental purpose is to assure the country of a modern, efficient, and aggressive merchant fleet. We need it for our foreign trade in peace and for the transportation of strategic war materials and as a naval auxiliary in war.

The Commission was created in 1936. Its basic program calls for the construction of 500 ships over a 10-year period. The new vessels are to provide replacements for obsolete ships and additions to the fleet where necessary. And I would like to emphasize that we did not undertake this program before making a very careful study of the entire merchant-marine problem. Upon the conclusions reached in that study we based our construction program. In other words, it was not an idea hatched in haste by an independent Government agency to be repented at leisure when funds were denied. Its principle was insisted upon by the Congress; its details were supplied by us.

The question is frequently asked, What will we do with all these ships?

Another which has been heard in the public forum is, With all our ships being laid up, why are we wasting all this money building new ones?

The answer to the first is, we are going to use them. The 20 completed are already in service, and operators are waiting for more.

The answer to the second is, we are not laying up "all our ships" or even a considerable handful.

The fact is, we could use more new ships than we now have available. And when I say use I mean sell to American operators.

I would like to state that the first type of ship which we have turned out has been proven the most efficient of its kind in the world. Compared, for instance, with the Hog Island vessel of the last war, the new one is 50 percent faster, yet it consumes fuel at less than half the rate of the old ship. Briefly, gentlemen, that means that modern American brains and technical skill have turned out a type of ship which, compared to her predecessor of 20 years ago, will save in fuel alone 35 to 40 percent of the entire construction cost over the ship's 20-year economic life span.

Of this type we are building 40. The record will show that we could sell more than 40.

I am sure that the members of this committee understand the importance of this increased vessel efficiency developed by the Commission both in its relation to economy of operation for commercial purposes and to the national defense, which is thereby assured of a fast and able auxiliary.

Mr. Speaker, the days of experimentation insofar as the Diesel engine is concerned are behind us. What we want now is not only a navy second to none but a merchant marine second to none. That can be accomplished by the construction of vessels of the best and most efficient type, fitted and equipped with the most modern, most efficient, and the most economical engines, machinery, and commercial appliances. It has been demonstrated the most efficient and economical engines are Diesels. Nothing but Diesels should be installed in our new cargo ships and transports, and we should also start placing them in Navy vessels.

Mr. COCHRAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and to include therein certain statements of Admiral Land before a Senate committee.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement by Gov. Roy E. Ayers, of Montana, before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a speech made by me in Chicago at a road convention, relative to highways.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

WESTERN OR OLD SETTLER CHEROKEES

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the matter provided for in the bill (H. R. 4498) for the relief of the Western or Old Settler Cherokees, and for other purposes, has been taken care of in the Deficiency Act of August 9, 1939, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bill may be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McKEOUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter received by me from the Polish American Council, Chicago, Ill., with reference to Polish relief in Poland.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

CALIFORNIA ORANGES

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, in a few minutes there will be delivered to the two cloakrooms some boxes of oranges which I have arranged to have come here from the very heart of the district which I represent. [Applause.]

I hope that everybody will enjoy the oranges and I hope, as you eat them, you will remember the contributions that California has made to the welfare of the United States and the contribution that she is now making, and as we come to you from time to time to appeal to you to understand our problems, that you may remember the sweetness of these oranges and that it may symbolize in your mind the good will of our great State. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including an article that appeared in the Foreign Service magazine entitled "Legislative Hurdles."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a short editorial on the subject of freight rates.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article from the Atlanta Constitution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALIFORNIA YOUTH LEGISLATURE

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to extend my remarks by printing a certain resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a resolution adopted by the State Council of the California Youth Legislature at their meeting held in Fresno, Calif., February 3 and 4, 1940. This resolution opposes Army recruiting within the National Youth Administration.

I wish to state that I agree with these young people in their opposition to such practice. When I recall that there is a great demand to militarize the C. C. C., and that both the N. Y. A. and C. C. C. are made up of those who come from the lowest economic strata of society, I become alarmed at the trend.

Is it possible that we are planning to make cannon fodder of those whom industry and commerce cannot use? Is the Army going to be allowed to send smooth-talking recruiting officers into the midst of these young people, most of whom are busily engaged in completing their education? Are these young folks to be talked into enlisting into the service at the expense of the betterment of their mental training?

I do not wish to be misunderstood. I am not opposed to Army service. We need a well-trained Army in these troubled times.

What I am opposed to is the trend toward making one class of our society bear the burden for all classes. These young people who by accident of birth are the children of parents of victims of a fast-changing society should not bear the burden of protecting the lives and property of other young folk whose parents still are fortunate enough to have a fortune or a job. If the national safety demands recruits and the Army is unable to get them through the regular channels let us go about the matter in a way in keeping with a democracy. Let us not take advantage of the unfortunate situation of these people and induce them to do something they might regret for the remainder of their lives. After all, this business of being a soldier is a pretty serious undertaking these days.

There are those who claim that it is a great privilege to have the training that the Army gives and that the children of the poor are fortunate, indeed, to have the opportunity. To these I say, "If it is a good thing for the poor it is equally good for the well-to-do and the rich," and a cross section of all society should be the recipient of all the benefits this training affords. I would much prefer conscription to such undemocratic method as is to be used. Even Hitler plays no favorites when it comes to bearing the military burden.

I compliment the California Youth Legislature for its alertness in detecting undemocratic trends.

Resolution adopted by State Council of California Youth Legislature, meeting in Fresno, February 3-4, 1940, on Army recruiting and National Youth Administration

Whereas Army recruiting officers have been given the authority to demand and obtain from the National Youth Administration complete lists of the youth workers employed by National Youth Administration at any time, for the purposes of recruiting them into the Army; and

Whereas upon the demand of the Army, the National Youth Administration is to arrange and sponsor meetings of its youth employees, so that Army representatives may come to them for the purpose of recruiting them into the Army; and

Whereas such control by the Army of the civilian departments of the Government constitutes a threat to democratic government, the beginning of military regimentation of government administration; and

Whereas such control further constitutes the start of the militarization of American youth, and therefore is a threat to the freedom and civil rights of young people; and

Whereas the President of the United States is responsible for the administration of the Army and the National Youth Administration; and even he has not the right to so alter the purposes and functions of the National Youth Administration, which are defined by law as for the relief of needy young people; and

Whereas we vigorously oppose all steps toward militarization of the American people: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the State Council of the California Youth Legislature demand that:

1. National Youth Administrator Williams instantly withdraw his order authorizing the furnishing of lists by National Youth Administration to the Army; and authorizing the use of National Youth Administration for other military purposes.

2. The Secretary of War forbid the intrusion of his subordinates into the operation of the civilian departments.

3. The President issue appropriate orders to carry out the foregoing, and notify the employees of National Youth Administration of his action, so they will be able to resume their work and study with reasonable hope and security; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the Vice President, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the administrators of the Federal Security Agency, and the National Youth Administration, and the National Youth Administration of California; and to Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt; the American Youth Congress; and the press.

REPUBLICAN CONVENTION

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the Republican Party is evidently going to hold its convention in the dark this year. They have just issued a long document, a preliminary platform, in which they completely dodge the power question, except to attack the T. V. A. and its yardstick, about which they show they know practically nothing, offer no relief from the exorbitant electric light and power rates the people are now paying, and promise no help for rural electrification, a matter in which farmers are most vitally interested.

I submit that this document ought to be published in Braille so that they can read it in the dark in their convention, because if they follow out the policy this platform indicates they would impose on the American people; that convention will be a complete blackout. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RODGERS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a brief communication from a businessman on the business situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a speech I delivered at Fremont, W. Va.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include an article from the Bel Air Daily Leader of January 22, 1940.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing a copy of a speech I delivered at Chattanooga, Tenn., in celebration of Lincoln's Birthday, and likewise by printing a copy of a resolution or memorial relating to the late Representative J. Will Taylor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include two short editorials.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including an address delivered by Mr. Frank Gannett.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I was granted consent to address the House today at the conclusion of the legislative program. I ask unanimous consent that that privilege be moved up to Friday, February 23.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Consent Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

SCHOOL FUNDS FOR WAPATO SCHOOL DISTRICT NO. 54, YAKIMA COUNTY, WASH.

The Clerk called the first bill on the Consent Calendar, (H. R. 3824) to provide funds for cooperation with Wapato School District No. 54, Yakima County, Wash., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children of the Yakima Reservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

PAYMENT OF NECESSARY EXPENSES INCURRED BY QUINAIELT INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2654, authorizing the payment of necessary expenses incurred by certain Indians allotted on the Quinaielt Reservation, State of Washington.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar Senate bill, S. 643, may be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the attorneys of record for those Quinaielt Indians who received their allotments on the Quinaielt Reservation, State of Washington, pursuant to judgments or decrees of a United States district or appellate court in a case wherein they were named parties plaintiff, the reasonable and fair value of the services rendered and expenses incurred, as heretofore fixed and determined by said Secretary; and the sum of $35,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to make said payments, the amount so paid for the account of each allottee to be reimbursed to the United States out of any funds now or hereafter accruing to the account of each such Indian allottee from the sale of his or her allotment, or the timber thereon.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the Senate bill to make it conform to the House bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: On page 2, line 1, strike out "$35,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$28,400.10."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 2654) was laid on the table.

RAILROADS IN THE TERRITORY OF ALASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4868, to amend the act authorizing the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING CERTAIN OFFICERS OF THE UNITED STATES INDIAN SERVICE TO MAKE ARRESTS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5409, to authorize certain officers of the United States Indian Service to make arrests in certain cases, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL MEXICAN CLAIMS COMMISSION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1821, to provide for the payment in full of the principal of awards of the Special Mixed Claims Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a very meritorious bill. It has been on the calendar for a long time. Many American citizens who suffered damages and financial loss are very much interested in the passage of this bill. It has been passed over two or three times now. This is a bill in which many people throughout this country are deeply interested. Unless my friend has some objection to the bill itself, I hope he will not press his unanimous-consent request.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I hope the gentleman will indulge me. He has caught me somewhat unaware, because my notes on it are in my office, but I think I could convince the gentleman if I had my notes here that there were valid objections. I wish the gentleman would not object to letting it go over without prejudice. If the gentleman will confer with me later, possibly he can remove some of the objections I have before the calendar is called next time. I am very willing to take into consideration the gentleman's suggestions.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, in view of the gentleman's statement, I will not object on this occasion.

Mr. FISH. May I inquire of the gentleman what his views are on this bill, because I sometimes agree with him and I would like to know whether I agree with him now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. McCORMACK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the fact that my friend from New York admits that he sometimes agrees with me is accepted by me as the highest compliment that I could receive. I will be frank and say that I agree with the gentleman from New York frequently.

Mr. FISH. Then I am sure we must be in accord. What is this discussion we are now engaged in?

Mr. McCORMACK. Is not the gentleman aware of the parliamentary situation?

Mr. FISH. No. I would like to be led by the distinguished gentleman once in a while. I am trying to get the facts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman followed me the other day, and I think we were both in a good cause.

Mr. FISH. And we will win in the end, because we are right, and righteousness and truth always prevail.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think so, because diplomatic relations, for all practical purposes, were broken with Russia by the recent speech of the Chief Executive.

I think the bill is a good one. It is to recompense American citizens who received damages years ago, or the heirs of those killed or who have died. It came out of the gentleman's Committee on Foreign Affairs. It has been passed over three times. I think it is a meritorious bill.

Mr. FISH. How much money does this involve?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am informed the amount of the bill is $2,598,000.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. THOMASON. To my mind, it is not so much a question of the amount of the claim as it is the justness of the claim. I have personal knowledge of many of these claims and acquaintance with a lot of the people along the Mexican border who sustained serious losses. Some of my constituents in El Paso and along the Mexican border have waited patiently for years for action in this matter. The Committee on Foreign Affairs has approved this bill. My recollection is that a similar bill has passed the Senate. It seems to me that in all fairness and in all justice some action ought to be taken. These people have a right to know whether they are ever going to recover some of the money to which they are justly entitled. These claimants are innocent in the matter, and it is only fair that the bill be taken up and also debated and voted upon. I hope my friend will not object.

Mr. FISH. Does this include the claim of the Illinois Central Railroad?

Mr. THOMASON. I am not sure who all the claimants are, for I do not have the bill before me at this minute. I do know that many American citizens sustained losses and have never received a cent. They are entitled to have this bill heard and considered. I know that it has much merit in it.

Mr. FISH. Is this the bill that requires the United States to dig into the Federal Treasury and pay out money that some foreign government has never paid us? If that is the precedent we are setting, I am absolutely against this bill and find myself forced against my will to differ with my friend from Massachusetts, whom I like so much.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] knows that this is a bill that has been taken up by the committee. I believe the gentleman from New York voted for it. It covers claims that have been brought before the Department and of which they have approved. There is no reason why this bill should not go through at the present time.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, under reservation of objection, I may state that I have no objection to the bills going over this time, but the next time it comes up I will object to a similar request.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, under those conditions I object to the request. We might as well bring the matter to a head now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FISH, Mr. COSTELLO, and Mr. CHURCH objected.

SAN FRANCISCO BAY EXPOSITION

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 242, to authorize the appropriation of an additional sum of $606,650 for Federal participation in the world's fair to be held by the San Francisco Bay Exposition, Inc., in the city of San Francisco during the year 1939.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this joint resolution be stricken from the Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

MEXICAN CLAIMS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 326, for the payment of awards and appraisals heretofore made in favor of citizens of the United States on claims presented under the General Claims Convention of September 8, 1923, United States and Mexico.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

ANNUAL AND SICK LEAVE OF CERTAIN POSTMASTERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5784, to provide for the conservation and transfer of accumulated sick leave and vacation time due classified civil-service employees who succeed to the position of postmaster, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every classified civil-service employee in a first- or second-class post office who shall be appointed to the position of postmaster shall retain to his credit whatever amount of sick leave and vacation time is properly due him on the date of his appointment to the position of postmaster: Provided, That such accumulated sick leave and vacation time shall be transferred to the credit of the employee as of the date of his appointment as postmaster in the same manner as the time might have been utilized by him before appointment: Provided further, That this act shall be retroactive to the extent that every postmaster at a first- or second-class post office who shall have received appointment as postmaster while an employee of the classified civil-service and who shall hold the position of postmaster on the date this act becomes effective, shall be entitled to the benefits of the act and shall be credited with the amount of accumulated sick leave and vacation time which was due him on the date of his appointment as postmaster: Provided further, That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act shall be repealed.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "in a first- or second-class post office".

On page 2, line 13, strike out the words "shall be" and insert in lieu thereof the words "are hereby".

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MERITORIOUS SERVICE MEDAL FOR CIVIL SERVICE OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1582, to authorize the President to bestow a meritorious service medal upon civil-service officers and employees of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN]?

Mr. FADDIS and Mr. RAMSPECK objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN, Mr. COSTELLO, and Mr. FADDIS objected.

GOOD BEHAVIOR OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5939, to provide for trials of and judgments upon the issue of good behavior in the case of certain Federal judges.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER]?

There was no objection.

ERECTION OF MONUMENT TO MEMORY OF FATHER PIERRE GIBAULT

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 219, to provide for the erection of a monument to the memory of the patriot priest, Father Pierre Gibault.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $50,000 be, and the same is hereby, authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the erection of a monument to the memory of the patriot priest, Father Pierre Gibault, at Cahokia, in the State of Illinois, with the advice of the Commissioner of Fine Arts. The said sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the county of Saint Clair or the citizens thereof shall cede and convey to the United States such suitable site as may in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior be required for said monument: And provided further, That the United States shall have no responsibility for the care and upkeep of the monument.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, strike out "Commissioner" and insert "Commission."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PASSAMAQUODDY TIDAL POWER

The Clerk called the next business, Senate Joint Resolution 57, authorizing the Secretary of War to cause a completion of surveys, test borings, and foundation investigations to be made to determine the advisability and cost of putting in a small experimental plant for development of tidal power in the waters in and about Passamaquoddy Bay, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for such examinations.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this joint resolution may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]?

There was no objection.

EXPEDITIOUS SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES WITH THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6324, to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact a rule has been requested for the consideration of this bill, I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO]?

There was no objection.

ADDITIONS TO SEQUOIA NATIONAL FOREST, CALIF.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1790, to authorize additions to the Sequoia National Forest, Calif., through exchanges under the act of March 20, 1922, or by proclamation or Executive order.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6314, authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Osage Tribe of Indians on account of their lands sold by the United States.

LXXXVI—103

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]?

There was no objection.

CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIANS LEASING OF UNDEVELOPED COAL AND ASPHALT DEPOSITS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7135, to authorize the leasing of undeveloped coal and asphalt deposits of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in Oklahoma.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to lease any of the unsold and undeveloped coal and asphalt deposits of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in Oklahoma, in accordance with the terms of the act of April 21, 1932 (47 Stat. 88), except as otherwise provided herein, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe. Leases made under this act may be for any term not to exceed 15 years.

Sec. 2. That the rate of royalty in coal leases made under this act shall not be less than 10 cents per ton on all coal mined, including what is commonly known as slack: Provided, That such leases shall require the mining of a minimum of 1,000 tons each year the first and second years after approval of the lease, 3,000 tons the third year, 5,000 tons the fourth year, and 15,000 tons the fifth and each succeeding year thereafter, or the payment of royalty thereon the same as if the coal had actually been mined: Provided further, That the lessee shall pay as advance royalty on each lease the sum of $100 each year for the first and second years, $300 for the third year, and $500 for the fourth and each year thereafter. The advance royalty paid for any year may be credited on the royalty becoming due on coal mined during the year for which said advance royalty has been paid, but shall not be credited on royalty on coal mined in any previous or subsequent year.

Sec. 3. That the rate of royalty in asphalt leases made under this act shall not be less than 15 cents per ton on all crude asphalt mined: Provided, That such leases shall require the mining of a minimum of 10,000 tons the first year after approval of the lease and 15,000 tons each year thereafter, or the payment of royalty thereon the same as if the asphalt had been mined: Provided further, That the lessee shall pay as advance royalty on each lease the sum of $500 in advance for each year. The advance royalty paid for any year may be credited on the royalty becoming due on asphalt mined during the year for which said advance royalty had been paid but shall not be credited on royalty on asphalt mined in any previous or subsequent year.

Sec. 4. That the act of April 21, 1932 (47 Stat. 88), is hereby amended to provide that leases made thereunder may be for any term not to exceed 15 years.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "lease", insert "to the highest responsible competitive bidder."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL UNITED STATES JUDGES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7079, to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN, Mr. VREELAND, and Mr. CHURCH objected.

PROCUREMENT OF AIRCRAFT FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7267, to facilitate the procurement of aircraft for the national defense.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar Senate bill, S. 2868, be considered in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, until June 30, 1941, whenever contracts are to be awarded as a result of competitive bids for furnishing the War Department or the Navy Department with aircraft, aircraft parts, and accessories therefor, the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to award a contract for the aircraft, aircraft parts, and accessories to be purchased as a result of any such competition to the bidder that the said Secretary shall find to be the lowest responsible bidder that can satisfactorily perform the work or service required to the best advantage of the Government, or in his discretion and when such action is considered necessary by the said Secretary in the interest of the national defense, to award contracts for such aircraft, aircraft parts, and accessories to such bidders, not exceeding three in number, as said Secretary shall find to be the lowest responsible bidders that can satisfactorily perform the work or the service required to the best advantage of the Government. The determinations as to such multiple awards and the necessity for making the same shall be based upon quality, times and rate of delivery, price, and the prevention of the overloading of a plant or plants, and such division of awards shall be made only when found by the said Secretary to be in the interest of the national defense: Provided, That no awards shall be made at prices in excess of those offered by the bidders in any such competition, and that the decision of the Secretary of the Department concerned as to the award of any such contract, or contracts, the interpretation of the provisions thereof, and the application and administration of the same shall not be reviewable, otherwise than as may be therein provided for, by any officer or tribunal of the United States except the President and the Federal courts: Provided further, That a report shall be made to the Congress by the Secretary of the Department concerned in the case of any competition as a result of which quantity contracts are entered into under authority of this act with more than one bidder immediately upon the execution of such contracts, setting forth the articles purchased, the prices paid therefor, the name or names of each bidder and of each contractor receiving a contract, and the particular reasons for awarding each of such contracts: Provided further, That any contract entered into under the authority hereby granted for the construction of any complete aircraft or any portion thereof shall be subject to the applicable profit-limitation provisions of the act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 505), as amended by the act of June 25, 1936 (49 Stat. 1926), and as further amended by the act of April 3, 1939 (Public, No. 18, 76th Cong.): Provided further, That procurement of aircraft, aircraft parts, and accessories therefor shall be made under authority of this act only when in the opinion of the Secretary of the Department concerned such action is necessary in the public interest: Provided further, That the authority herein granted shall not be construed to abrogate, repeal, or suspend any of the provisions of Revised Statutes (3709, U. S. C. 41: 5), the act of March 2, 1901 (31 Stat. 905), the act of July 2, 1926 (44 Stat. 787), section 14 of the act of April 3, 1939 (Public, No. 18, 76th Cong.), or of the act of July 13, 1939 (Public, No. 168, 76th Cong.), or to prohibit the award of any contracts in any manner now authorized by law, but shall be construed as additional legislation to be utilized under the conditions herein set forth during the effective period of this act: And provided further, That this act shall be applicable under the conditions herein set forth to awards of contracts upon which competitive bids have been heretofore requested or received but as a result of which contracts have not been awarded.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 7267) was laid on the table.

NATIONAL MISSISSIPPI RIVER PARKWAY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3759, to authorize a National Mississippi River Parkway and matters relating thereto.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

ESTABLISHING A NATIONAL LAND POLICY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1675, to establish a national land policy and to provide homesteads free of debt for actual farm families.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BURDICK. I object to the request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this bill calls for a total cost of $120,000,000 annually. I believe it is too important a bill to be considered on the Consent Calendar. For that reason I object.

KIOWA, COMANCHE, AND APACHE TRIBES JURISDICTIONAL ACT

The Clerk called the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 290) referring the claims of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma to the Court of Claims for finding of fact and report to Congress.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE OR FERRY ACROSS THE RIO GRANDE AT BOCA CHICA, TEX.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3138, authorizing J. E. Pate, his successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge or ferry across the Rio Grande River at Boca Chica, Tex.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate international commerce, improve the Postal Service, and for other purposes, J. E. Pate, his successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge or ferry and approaches thereto across the Rio Grande River, so far as the United States has jurisdiction over the waters of such river, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Boca Chica, Tex., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act, and subject also to the approval of the International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, El Paso, Tex., and of the proper authorities in the Republic of Mexico.

Sec. 2. There is hereby conferred upon J. E. Pate, his successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property in the State of Texas needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge or ferry and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State of Texas upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

Sec. 3. The said J. E. Pate, his successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge or ferry in accordance with any laws of Texas applicable thereto, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

Sec. 4. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to J. E. Pate, his successors and assigns; and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

Sec. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

"Sec. 5. J. E. Pate, his successors and assigns, shall promptly provide and maintain, without expense to the Government, such suitable and conveniently located facilities as may be reasonably necessary to enable the Federal agency or agencies, stationed at the bridge or ferry, to discharge properly its, or their, legal functions relating to the regulation and supervision of commerce with foreign nations. The suitability and convenience of location of the facilities shall be determined by the head of the Federal agency concerned. The word 'facilities' as used in this act means inspection quarters, together with heat, light, and sanitation facilities. In the event of the neglect, failure, or refusal to furnish facilities in pursuance of the provisions of this act, the head of any department affected by such neglect, failure, or refusal is hereby authorized to close the bridge or ferry to all traffic until such time as the said facilities shall have been furnished."

Page 4, line 1, strike out "5" and insert "6."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing J. E. Pate, his successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge or ferry across the Rio Grande at Boca Chica, Tex."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DEVIL'S DEN SPRINGS, GA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4040, declaring Devil's Den Springs, in Decatur County, Ga., to be nonnavigable.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

TOLL BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER AT OR NEAR FLORENCE STATION, CITY OF OMAHA, NEBR.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7069, authorizing Douglas County, Nebr., to construction, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Missouri River at or near Florence Station, in the city of Omaha, Nebr.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

CHANGING THE DESIGNATION OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN NATIONAL PARK, KY., AND THE FORT M'HENRY NATIONAL PARK, MD.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5573, to change the designation of Abraham Lincoln National Park, in the State of Kentucky, and the Fort McHenry National Park, in the State of Maryland.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that a Senate bill (S. 2046) has been passed and is now public law 383, which deals with the same item contained in this bill. As a result, I do not believe this legislation will be necessary. For that reason, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be stricken from the calendar and laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

RETIREMENT OF EMPLOYEES OF LAND-GRANT COLLEGES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1850, to aid the States and Territories in making provisions for the retirement of employees of the land-grant colleges.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, pursuant to the recognized obligations of governments to guarantee the social security of their employees and in order to provide for the retirement on an annuity, or otherwise, of all persons being paid salaries in whole or in part from grants of Federal funds to the several States and Territories pursuant to the terms of the Act approved July 2, 1862, for the endowment and support of colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts, and acts supplementary thereto providing for instruction in agriculture and mechanic arts, for the establishment of agricultural experiment stations, and for cooperative extension work in agriculture and home economics, all States and Territories are hereafter authorized, notwithstanding any contrary provisions in said acts, to withhold from expenditure, from Federal funds advanced under the terms of said acts, amounts designated as employer contributions to be made by the States or Territories to retirement systems established in accordance with the laws of such States or Territories, or established by the governing boards of colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts in accordance with the authority vested in them, and to deposit such amounts to the credit of such retirement systems for subsequent disbursement in accordance with the terms of the retirement systems in effect in the respective States and Territories: Provided, That there shall not be deducted from Federal funds and deposited to the credit of retirement accounts as employer contributions, amounts in excess of 5 percent of that portion of the salaries of employees paid from such Federal funds: Provided further, That, for the purpose of making deposits and contributions in retirement systems in favor of any employee, in no event shall the deductions from any Federal fund advanced pursuant to the foregoing acts be in greater proportion to the total deductions for such employee than the salary received under such Federal funds bears to the total salary from Federal sources: Provided further, That the deposits and contributions from funds of Federal origin to any retirement system established by a State or a land-grant college must be at least equalled by the total contributions thereto on the part of the individuals concerned, the State, and the counties: And provided further, That no deductions for the foregoing purposes shall be made from Federal funds in support of employees appointed pursuant to the terms of the foregoing acts, whose salaries are paid wholly by the States or Territories: Provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any employee paid in whole or in part from Federal funds who may be subject to the United States Civil Service Retirement Act, as amended.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OSAGE TRIBE OF INDIANS

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 288 authorizing the Osage Tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. COCHRAN, and Mr. COSTELLO objected.

LIMITATION OF PRESENT LAWS WITH RESPECT TO COUNSEL IN CERTAIN CASES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7032, to limit the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in certain cases.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

RELIEF OF INDIANS WHO HAVE PAID TAXES ON ALLOTTED LANDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 952, for the relief of Indians who have paid taxes on allotted lands for which patents in fee were issued without application by or consent of the allottees and subsequently canceled, and for the reimbursement of public subdivisions by whom judgments for such claims have been paid.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I object to that request.

Mr. COCHRAN. I may say that I am doing this at the request of the author of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. COSTELLO, and Mr. CHURCH objected.

SISETON AND WAHPETON BANDS OF SIOUX INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 793, authorizing payment to the Sisseton and Wahpeton Bands of Sioux Indians for certain lands ceded by them to the United States by a treaty of July 23, 1851.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I object to that request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. CHURCH, and Mr. COSTELLO objected.

ANNUAL AND SICK LEAVE FOR GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1975, to amend the Annual and Sick Leave Acts of March 14, 1936.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar Senate bill (S. 2876) be substituted for the House bill.

There being no objection, the clerk read the Senate bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the days of annual leave with pay provided for in the act of March 14, 1936 (49 Stat. 1161), and the days of sick leave with pay provided for in the act of March 14, 1936 (49 Stat. 1162), shall mean days upon which employees would otherwise work and receive pay, and shall be exclusive of Sundays which do not occur within a regular tour of duty, holidays, and all nonwork days established by Federal statute or by Executive or administrative order.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 1975) was laid on the table.

ABLE SEAMEN ON SAILING VESSELS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7339, to exempt sail vessels from the provisions of section 13 of the act of March 4, 1915, as amended, requiring the manning of certain merchant vessels by able seamen, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no provision of section 13 of the act of March 4, 1915, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 edition, Supp. IV, title 46, sec. 672), relating to the manning of certain vessels with respect to able seamen, shall apply to any sail vessel: Provided, however, That at least 65 percent of the deck crew of any sail vessel operating on the high seas shall be composed of persons who have served for a period of not less than 6 months in the deck crew of sail vessels to which this act applies: Provided, however, That the exemption of sail vessels from the provisions of section 13 of the Seamen's Act of March 4, 1915, as amended, shall not apply to sail vessels carrying passengers for hire.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, following line 14, insert a new section to be known as section 2, as follows:

"SEC. 2. Any violation of this act by the owner, master, or officer in charge of the vessel shall subject the owner of such vessel to a penalty of not less than $100 and not more than $500."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COLLISIONS OF VESSELS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7420) to amend laws for preventing collisions of vessels.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That article 11 of section 1 of the act of June 7, 1897 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 33, sec. 180), be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"ART. 11. A vessel under 150 feet in length when at anchor shall carry forward, where it can best be seen, but at a height not exceeding 20 feet above the hull, a white light in a lantern so constructed as to show a clear, uniform, and unbroken light visible all around the horizon at a distance of at least 1 mile: Provided, That the Secretary of Commerce may, after investigation, designate such areas as he may deem proper as 'special anchorage areas'; such special anchorage areas may from time to time be changed, or abolished, if after investigation the Secretary of Commerce shall deem such change or abolition in the interest of navigation: Provided further, That vessels not more than 65 feet in length when at anchor in any such special anchorage area shall not be required to carry or exhibit the white light required by this article.

"A vessel of 150 feet or upward in length, when at anchor, shall carry in the forward part of the vessel, at a height of not less than 20 and not exceeding 40 feet above the hull, one such light, and at or near the stern of the vessel, and at such a height that it shall be not less than 15 feet lower than the forward light, another such light.

"The length of a vessel shall be deemed to be the length appearing in her certificate of registry.

"A vessel aground in or near a fairway shall carry the above light or lights and the two red lights prescribed by article 4 (a)."

SEC. 2. Rule 9 of section 1 of the act of February 8, 1895, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 33, sec. 258), be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"RULE 9. A vessel under 150 feet register length, when at anchor, shall carry forward, where it can best be seen, but at a height not exceeding 20 feet above the hull, a white light constructed so as to show a clear, uniform, and unbroken light visible all around the horizon at a distance of at least 1 mile: Provided, That the Secretary of Commerce may, after investigation, designate such areas as he may deem proper as 'special anchorage areas'; such special anchorage areas may from time to time be changed, or abolished, if after investigation the Secretary of Commerce shall deem such change or abolition in the interest of navigation: Provided further, That vessels not more than 65 feet in length, when at anchor, in any such special anchorage area shall not be required to carry or exhibit the white light required by this article.

"A vessel of 150 feet or upward in register length, when at anchor, shall carry in the forward part of the vessel two white lights at the same height of not less than 20 and not exceeding 40 feet above the hull and not less than 10 feet apart horizontally and athwartships, except that each need not be visible all around the horizon but so arranged that one or the other, or both, shall show a clear, uniform, and unbroken light and be visible from any angle of approach at a distance of at least 1 mile; and at or near the stern of the vessel two similar lights, similarly arranged and at such a height that they shall not be less than 15 feet lower than the forward lights. In addition the four anchor lights above specified, at least one white deck light shall be displayed in every interval of 100 feet along the deck, measuring from the forward lights, said deck lights to be not less than 2 feet above the deck and arranged, so far as intervening structures will permit, so as to be visible from any angle of approach."

SEC. 3. Rule 10 of section 4233 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 33, sec. 319), be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"RULE 10. All vessels, whether steam vessels or sail vessels, when at anchor in roadsteads or fairways, shall, between sunset and sunrise, exhibit where it can best be seen, but at a height not exceeding 20 feet above the hull, a white light in a globular lantern of 8 inches in diameter, and so constructed as to show a clear, uniform, and unbroken light, visible all around the horizon, and at a distance of at least 1 mile: Provided, That the Secretary of Commerce may, after investigation, designate such areas as he may deem proper as 'special anchorage areas'; such special anchorage areas may from time to time be changed, or abolished, if after investigation the Secretary of Commerce shall deem such change or abolition in the interest of navigation: Provided further, That vessels not more than 65 feet in length when at anchor in any such special anchorage area shall not be required to carry or exhibit the white light required by this article."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 12, strike out the word "Commerce" and insert the word "War";

MARKERS FOR CERTAIN GRAVES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8083) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish certain markers for certain graves.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any provision of existing law the Secretary of War is authorized to furnish, upon application, for use on graves in cemeteries where stone markers are not acceptable, a headstone or marker of such standard design and material as may be approved by him, within the limit of prevailing costs of the standard World War type headstone, for the grave of any deceased person for which the Secretary of War is authorized to furnish a marker or headstone: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall furnish the upright stone marker, authorized by section 4877 of the Revised Statutes, for cemeteries under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

TRAVEL EXPENSES OF CERTAIN CIVILIAN OFFICERS, ETC.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8151) to provide travel expenses of civilian officers and employees upon official change of station.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter any appropriations made available for expenses of travel of civilian officers and employees of the executive departments and establishments shall be available also for expenses of travel performed by them on transfer from one official station to another when authorized by the head of the department or establishment concerned: Provided, That such expenses shall not be allowed for any transfer effected for the convenience of the officer or employee.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

RADIO REQUIREMENTS FOR SHIPS ON GREAT LAKES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7863) to amend section 602 (e) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, relating to a study of radio requirements for ships navigating the Great Lakes and inland waters of the United States.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 602 (c) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended (50 Stat. 197; U. S. C., 1934 ed. Supp. IV, title 47, sec. 602), is hereby amended by striking out the words "not later than December 31, 1939", and inserting in lieu thereof the words "as soon as practicable but not later than January 1, 1941".

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING MARITIME COMMISSION TO ACQUIRE CERTAIN LANDS, ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 424, to authorize the United States Maritime Commission to acquire certain lands at St. Petersburg, Fla.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the United States Maritime Commission is hereby authorized, with funds in the construction fund of the Commission, to acquire on behalf of the United States by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, and pay all costs incident to the examination, transfer, and perfecting of title to that certain tract of land aggregating 10.05 acres, more or less, situated and being in the county of Pinellas, State of Florida, together with the structures thereon, described as follows:

Beginning at the southeast corner of lot 4, block 22, Bayboro Addition, as recorded in plat book 3, pages 51 and 52, records of Pinellas County, Fla.; thence run south along the west line of Asbury Street South to a point 277.41 feet south; thence southeast on an angle of 45° to the left a distance of 969.16 feet; thence east on an angle of 44°57' to the left a distance of 395.4 feet; thence northwest on an angle of 124°42'34" to the left a distance of 970.38 feet to the farthest southwest corner of the wharf of the port of St. Petersburg, Fla.; thence west on an angle of 55°16'26" to the left a distance of 343.85 feet to the west line of First Street South; thence north on said west line of First Street South and on an angle of 89°56' to the right a distance of 164.3 feet to the southeast corner of lot 4, block 23, said Bayboro Addition; thence west on an angle of 89°46'42" to the left and on the south line of said lot 4, block 23, and continue west to the west line of Asbury Street South a distance of 185 feet to the point of beginning, all of said tract lying and being in the city of St. Petersburg, county of Pinellas, State of Florida.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

BARRING CLAIMS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8150) providing for the barring of claims against the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. BURDICK. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BURDICK, Mr. O'CONNOR, and Mr. CASE of South Dakota objected.

AMENDING CROP-LOAN LAW

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7878) to amend the crop-loan law relating to the lien imposed thereunder, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Michigan to withdraw that request so that I may make an explanation under the reservation of an objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have read the bill and report very carefully and it seems to me that the bill is really a bill for the relief of the landlord. It secures the landlord's share and lessens the security of the Government. I think it so amends the policy with respect to these loans as to point to an entirely new policy with respect to crop loans. It is too important a bill to be taken up by unanimous consent.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's statement and do not care to argue the matter other than to say that the first part of the bill just prevents the Farm Credit Administration from taking a lien on a farmer's particular crop as a whole. Just that crop that is financed with the proceeds of the loan is subject to the lien. As the law now stands his entire crop is subject to the lien. As I understand, it is the second portion of the bill to which the gentleman from Michigan objects—the elimination of the landlord's waiver of his lien. I do not ask the gentleman to withdraw his objection, but if he feels the bill should be objected to, I shall have to accede to his demand.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Possibly debate would clear up some of the objections that I have.

Mr. DOXEY. We did not have much objection in our committee. We gave this bill very thorough consideration. This bill was reported by our chairman, and I just wanted to know what was in the mind of the gentleman from Michigan so that we could clear it up, if possible, and pass this bill today.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Personally, I do not see why the landlord should not take a little chance along with the tenant on the loans which are made to capitalize his investment.

Mr. DOXEY. The principle and purpose is to enable the borrower to get the loan by putting up his interest in the crop, so that he does not have to be barred in case the landlord does not want to go along with him. It is all in the interest of the borrower. That is the simple explanation to this portion of the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. But I should think it would be very much to the interest of the landlord if he is relieved from having to put up his share as a part of the security for the loan.

Mr. DOXEY. It is a matter of negotiation between the borrower and the lender, of course. As the law now exists the landlord can block the sharecropper or tenant from getting any money at all from the Farm Credit Administration if he does not waive his lien. We are trying to eliminate that hardship on the tenant or sharecropper. That is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am sure if that is the case, as the gentleman says, that the Rules Committee will be pleased to grant a rule for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DOXEY. I just rose for the purpose of trying to persuade the gentleman from Michigan to not object. It is time now to loan money on the crop, and time is quite an element in this bill. The Committee on Agriculture was anxious to have it passed on the Consent Calendar if possible. Of course, I appreciate the gentleman's position. I would like to have him withdraw his request that it be passed over, but if he does not, I yield to his judgment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. WOLCOTT) that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST GRADUATES OF CERTAIN LAW SCHOOLS, ETC.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1610, to prevent discrimination against graduates of certain schools, and those acquiring their legal education in law offices, in the making of appointments to Government positions, the qualifications for which include legal training or legal experience.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if there is no explanation of this bill, I would ask that it go over without prejudice.

Mr. McCORMACK. Reserving the right to object, I may say that I have read the report with interest, because I was very much interested in this bill. There is a practice that has developed over the years in connection with civil-service examinations for lawyers and doctors. While this bill does not cover doctors, I think it should cover the medical profession as well.

Mr. McLEAN. And economists?

Mr. McCORMACK. Well, anyone who is affected. I think the civil service should be open to everybody who meets the requirements and that the examination should be sufficiently difficult so that those only who are eminently qualified can pass. But there has been a system developed, unfortunately, where, as I understand it—and say this with some reservations, but I have had some exchange of letters with the Civil Service Commission in the past—where the Civil Service Commission permits considerable latitude to a department in writing the requirements of eligibility. True, the Civil Service Commission can disapprove the requirements, but it is very rare. As the result of the requirements written, the practical results are that only the graduates of certain schools, or men with certain experience, can qualify; the objective usually being—and I say this not in any harshly critical way, but from the angle of constructive criticism—to confine it to a small group. I think that all lawyers should be eligible to take civil-service examinations. I think all doctors should, and all others should.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEAN. I yield.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. This bill was introduced by the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], who is a very careful and conservative man in his views and never introduces legislation unless he knows the need of it. This bill passed the Senate. I am somewhat familiar with the need of the legislation. It grows out of the practice which I think has resulted in discrimination against graduates of smaller colleges and schools and in favor of selected groups of large colleges. It is not to give one group an advantage over another, but to treat all alike and let it rest upon educational qualifications, without favoritism. I think the principle enunciated is fair, and the bill ought to pass.

Mr. McLEAN. What is the use of encumbering the statutes with a lot of laws that we pay no attention to? We have a law on the statute books that provides that no lawyer who has been connected with the Government service shall be allowed to practice law against Government or in the departments for 2 years after he leaves the service. We have had about six or eight bills here to exempt certain individuals from the provisions of that law. Not only do we allow them to retire from the Government service and immediately engage in practice in matters where the Government is concerned and before the departments, but they have taken with them unfinished Government matters on which they had been engaged and they are continued in Government employ and are paid annual salaries while they are at the same time practicing law and taking business against the Government. I do not see why we should encumber our statutes with a lot of laws that mean nothing and to which we are going to pass exceptions not only for schools, but for particular individuals.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Permit me to say that I agree with the gentleman, that laws ought to be enforced. I am in favor of the enforcement of all laws. But I ask the gentleman from New Jersey, Are you going to invoke the doctrine that because some laws are not enforced you will force us later to correct an injustice or discrimination which is sought to be corrected here? It will do justice to those who come from the smaller as well as the larger colleges and the gentleman's sense of fairness should prevent him from objecting to this bill.

Mr. McLEAN. I would like to know more of the background of this bill, what is behind it, and the circumstances which brought it here.

Mr. McCORMACK. They have a list of certain law schools in this country from which certain individuals will be taken.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New Jersey yield?

Mr. McLEAN. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. This bill arises out of a ruling made by an appointing officer in the Department of Agriculture. And right here I would like to correct an impression unintentionally made by the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts. It did not arise out of any civil-service procedure, but out of a rule made by an officer in the Department of Agriculture on non-civil-service jobs. He announced that he would not consider for any legal position any lawyer who had not graduated from a school approved by the American Association of Law Schools.

The Senate passed this bill to prevent the application of that rule, taking the position, which I think is sound, that it is not where a man gets his qualifications, but has he got them, that ought to be the test as to whether he can be employed by the Government.

The Civil Service Commission, while opposed to this bill, points out that it is in line in most cases with their practice. It is true that in a few cases for specialized legal work they have required certain educational qualifications.

The purpose of the bill is to prevent any appointing officer in the Government from setting up a rule that he will not take lawyers unless they come from a particular group of law schools.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not want anything I said to be construed as a criticism of the Civil Service Commission, because I have a profound respect for the Commission, its members, and the manner of administration.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I know the gentleman has.

Mr. McCORMACK. But I do say that within the past 2 years I had a situation where a young man, a doctor, who came up the hard way, unable to attend an outstanding medical school, but came up the hard way, studied nights, served his internship; yet as a result of requirements laid down in the department, and which the Civil Service Commission approved—I suppose they collaborate with the departments as to the requirements—this man and the group he represented—and there must be many throughout the country—were unable to take the examination.

I say we want the best men in the service, but no American should be barred from taking the examination. The examination should be hard enough, severe enough, and strict enough—and it can be made so—in order that only the best qualified and most learned of those aspiring can pass the examination. In other words, opportunity of application and examination should not, in my opinion, be denied to anyone.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Certainly.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I agree with him 1,000 percent.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman accept an amendment to include doctors also?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I have no objection to such an amendment. As a matter of fact, I have told the Commission time and time again that I did not believe they ought to announce an examination where they prohibited the substitution of experience for educational qualifications. I believe any man ought to be entitled to demonstrate his ability, regardless of whether he ever graduated from a school or college.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. FADDIS. I understand that the necessity for this legislation is brought about because of the arbitrary decision of some bureaucrat here in this city that he will or will not appoint a man from such and such a school. Is that true?

Mr. McCORMACK. In effect, yes.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, suggestions have been made that we include doctors, economists, social-service workers, dentists, and other groups. I think we ought to give this matter further study and have the bill passed over until we can perfect amendments to take care of these situations.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEAN. I yield.

Mr. FADDIS. Does not the gentleman believe it is time the House took some definite action to prevent such peremptory action on the part of bureaucrats downtown?

Mr. McLEAN. Yes; and I think, also, it is time we stopped lawyers resigning from the Government service, taking Government business with them, continuing on the pay roll, and allowing them at the same time to take cases against the Government within the time limit of the law.

I press my request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McLEAN]?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I will not object, I realize the gentleman's request is made from an angle that is favorable to legislation of this type and in order to enable more consideration of the bill by the Members. I personally favor the bill, but I believe it should be broadened.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I will not object, I am in sympathy with the idea of broadening the provisions of this act. In this connection I merely call attention to the fact that when this bill reached the House there was an amendment offered in the House Committee on the Civil Service striking out in lines 10, 11, and 12 a provision that no discrimination should apply to anyone taking an examination because of any racial or religious group or organization affiliations. I direct attention to that particular language of the Senate draft in the hope that when the bill is revised by the House Civil Service Committee the provision may be retained as passed in the Senate, because if we are going to provide for an inability on the part of these so-called bureaucrats to set up extra-legal provisions which the Congress of the United States does not enact, I certainly claim that in keeping with the fundamental provisions of the Constitution of our country, no discrimination should apply to any citizen of this Nation seeking to enter the Government service because of racial or religious group or organization affiliations, and I hope that will be cared for when the committee revises this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McLEAN]?

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Speaker, I object. I may remark that this bill was reported unanimously by the House Committee on the Civil Service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

AMENDMENT OF SERVICE PENSIONS ACTS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7147, to amend the service-pension acts pertaining to the War with Spain, Philippine Insurrection, and the China Relief Expedition to include certain continuous service.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in determining the period of active service for the purpose of the act of May 1, 1926 (Public Law No. 166, 69th Cong.), the act of June 2, 1930 (Public Law No. 299, 71st Cong.), and the act of May 24, 1938 (Public Law No. 541, 75th Cong.), granting service pensions to veterans and dependants of deceased veterans of the War with Spain, the Philippine Insurrection, and the China Relief Expedition, continuous active service entered into during the War with Spain, the Philippine Insurrection, or the China Relief Expedition shall be included although part of such continuous service extended into either the Philippine Insurrection or the China Relief Expedition.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "Insurrection", strike out the word "and" and insert "or."

On page 2, after line 5, insert a new provision as follows: "Payments of benefits under the provisions of this act shall be effective the date of enactment thereof as to those persons on the rolls and as to claims pending on the date of enactment of this act. In all other cases awards of pension authorized hereunder shall be effective from date of application therefor after the date of enactment of this act."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MILEAGE TABLES FOR UNITED STATES ARMY AND OTHER GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 506, relating to mileage tables for the United States Army and other Government agencies and to mileage allowances for persons employed in the offices of Members of House and Senate.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH]?

There was no objection.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A GREENVILLE MEMORIAL COMMISSION

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 385 establishing a Greenville Memorial Commission to formulate plans for the construction of a memorial building to commemorate the Treaty of Greene Ville at Greenville, Ohio.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas Greenville, Ohio, is the site of Fort Greene Ville, where was signed the famous Treaty of Greene Ville; and

Whereas the treaty thus negotiated in 1795, between General "Mad Anthony" Wayne and the Indians and signed by President George Washington and William Henry Harrison, aide de camp to General Wayne and later President of the United States, was one of the most important events in the life of our Nation; and

Whereas Greene Ville, named after General Wayne's Revolutionary compatriot, General Nathaniel Greene, marked the headquarters from which General Wayne pressed on to victory over the Indians, caused the British to retire from Detroit and other lake points, and opened to peaceful invasion the entire territory north of the Ohio River and east of the Mississippi River, from which were formed the great States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Minnesota, and Wisconsin; and

Whereas the pledge of security given by the treaty stimulated emigration to a remarkable degree and made possible the founding of such outstanding cities as Chicago, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit, Fort Wayne, Indianapolis, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, and many other great cities; and

Whereas the victory is considered the most complete and most important ever gained over the Northwestern Indians during the 40 years' warfare it put to an end, and actually terminated the Revolutionary War; and

Whereas the Treaty of Greene Ville made possible the onrush of Americans into the great Northwest Territory, laying the foundation of the United States as a world power; and

Whereas there are now housed in the Public Library of Greenville, Ohio, hundreds of mementos and trophies of this critical period of American history which should be placed in a suitable memorial building in order to be preserved for future generations: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established a Commission, to be known as the Greenville Memorial Commission, and to be composed of nine Commissioners, three to be appointed by the President of the United States, three Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House. Such Commission shall consider and formulate plans for designing and constructing a permanent memorial to and for designing and constructing a memorial building at Greenville, Ohio.

Sec. 2. Such Commission may, in its discretion, accept from any source, public or private, money or property to be used for the purpose of making surveys and investigations, formulating, preparing, and considering plans for the construction of such memorial, or other expenses incurred, or to be incurred, in carrying out the provisions of this joint resolution.

Sec. 3. The Commission shall report its recommendations to Congress as soon as practicable.

Sec. 4. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000, which shall be available to defray the necessary expenses of the Commission for the performance of their duties hereinafter prescribed. Disbursement of sums herein authorized to be appropriated shall be made upon vouchers approved by the Chairman of the Commission.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 3, line 4, after the word "memorial", strike out "to and for designing and constructing a memorial."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DELAWARE TRIBE OF INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6535, authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Delaware Tribe of Indians on account of permanent annuities under treaty provision.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott]?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT TO SECTION 6, ORGANIC ACT OF ALASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4776, to amend section 6 of the Organic Act of Alaska.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act entitled "An act to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 512), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 6. Convening and sessions of legislature: The Legislature of Alaska shall convene at the capitol at the city of Juneau, Alaska, on the fourth Monday in January in the year 1940 and on the fourth Monday in January in each year thereafter; but the said legislature shall not continue in session longer than 30 days in the year 1940 and in each even-numbered year thereafter and shall not continue in session longer than 60 days in the year 1941 and in each odd-numbered year thereafter unless again convened in extraordinary session by a proclamation of the Governor, which shall set forth the object thereof and give at least 15 days' notice in writing or by telegram or radiogram to each member of said legislature, and in such case shall not continue in session longer than 15 days. The Governor of Alaska is hereby authorized to convene the legislature in extraordinary session for a period not exceeding 15 days when requested to do so by the President of the United States or when any public danger or necessity may require it."

Sec. 2. Section 2 of the act entitled "An act fixing the date for holding elections of a Delegate from Alaska to the House of Representatives and of members of the Legislature of Alaska; fixing the date on which the Legislature of Alaska shall hereafter meet; prescribing the personnel of the Territorial canvassing board, defining its duties, and for other purposes," approved March 26, 1934 (48 Stat. 465), is repealed.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "Legislature", strike out the balance of line 9 and all of lines 10 and 11, and lines 1 to 15 on page 2, and insert the following: "The Legislature of Alaska shall convene at the capitol at the city of Juneau, Alaska, on the fourth Monday in January in the year 1941 and on the fourth Monday in January every 2 years thereafter; but the said legislature shall not continue in session longer than 60 days in any 2 years unless again convened in extraordinary session by a proclamation of the Governor, which shall set forth the object thereof and give at least 15 days' notice in writing or by telegram or radiogram to each member of said legislature, and in such case shall not continue in session longer than 30 days. The Governor of Alaska is hereby authorized to convene the legislature in extraordinary session for a period not exceeding 30 days when requested to do so by the President of the United States, or when any public danger or necessity may require it."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRANSFER OF FUNDS TO WRANGELL, ALASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7612, for the transfer of funds to the town of Wrangell, Alaska.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the judge of the district court for the first judicial division of Alaska is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the city treasurer of the incorporated town of Wrangell, Alaska, from a fund called fund "C" of said district court, the sum of $6,092.76, heretofore paid into said fund "C" by the Diamond K Packing Co., a corporation of Wrangell, Alaska, in satisfaction of a judgment imposed upon said corporation by said court for non-payment of license tax due the United States, in approximately the same sum, and by law inuring to the benefit of said town of Wrangell.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADOPTING LAWS OF STATES FOR PUNISHING WRONGFUL ACTS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7018, to amend section 289 of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 463) in regard to adopting laws of States for punishing wrongful acts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there some one present who can explain the effect of this bill?

Mr. CELLER. We have brought it down to February 1, to bring it up to date.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman state what part of the Federal law this applies to? Is this the section that adopts the State codes with regard to penalties for various crimes on Federal reservations, including Indian reservations?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. This merely brings this up to date, accepting the State codes?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. It simply brings the present law up to date; that is correct. It extends the time for the application of the law.

Mr. CELLER. We have passed these bills almost every session.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. This bill is merely a changing of the date at which the State codes are accepted?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. That is entirely correct.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I believe some of the rest of us are interested in what these bills amending the criminal code do. Will the gentleman explain the nature of the bill?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. This bill simply extends the effective date of the present law which makes applicable the provisions of the State act with respect to criminal offenses committed on a reservation which is surrounded by the State.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 289 of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 463) be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 289. Whoever, within the territorial limits of any State, organized Territory, or district, but within or upon any of the places now existing or hereafter reserved or acquired, described in section 272 of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 451), shall do or omit the doing of any act or thing which is not made penal by any laws of Congress, but which if committed or omitted within the jurisdiction of the State, Territory, or district in which such place is situated, by the laws thereof in force on June 1, 1939, and remaining in force at the time of the doing or omitting the doing of such act or thing, would be penal, shall be deemed guilty of a like offense and be subject to a like punishment."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, lines 2 and 3, strike out "June 1, 1939," and insert "February 1, 1940."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PUNISHMENT FOR THE KILLING OR ASSAULTING OF FEDERAL OFFICERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7019, to amend section 1 of the act providing punishment for the killing or assaulting of Federal officers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FADDIS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to have this bill explained so we may know what it is.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The bill amends the existing law relating to the killing of certain Federal law-enforcement officers. The present act makes it a Federal offense to kill certain designated officers. Among these are United States marshals and deputy marshals and also special agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The law is indefinite in that it is not quite certain whether it applies to the murder of a person who is employed to assist a United States marshal or deputy marshal or to a person who is an officer or an employee of the Federal Bureau of Investigation but who may not be officially designated as a special agent of that Bureau. This bill simply expands the definition to make it certain that the law will apply to a person who is appointed by a marshal for the purpose of assisting him while, for instance, taking a prisoner to a Federal penitentiary.

Mr. FADDIS. Then it does not narrow the field any?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. It expands it.

Mr. FADDIS. It does not provide any loopholes through which criminals may escape?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. No.

Mr. FADDIS. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. COCHRAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, does the present law take in the post-office inspectors and the employees of the Intelligence Unit of the Bureau of Internal Revenue who are constantly investigating dangerous characters?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes. The bill does not affect those in any way.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does existing law protect them?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The gentleman will see in the report that the bill substitutes the phrase "any officer or employee of the Federal Bureau of Investigation" for the phrase "special agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation" in the existing law.

Mr. COCHRAN. If you are going to take care of some Federal enforcement officers, why not take care of all of them? That is what I advocate.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I may say to the gentleman that the law now applies to post-office inspectors, Secret Service operatives, and similar officers. The bill simply provides that a person who is appointed to assist a United States marshal or deputy marshal is brought within the provisions of this act.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, does this measure also apply to every employee or appointee of the Federal Government?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. If the gentleman from Nebraska will permit me to answer, may I say to my friend from Colorado that the purpose of this proposed legislation is to bring within the protection of the Federal criminal provisions persons who are engaged by a marshal to help effectuate a particular arrest, or persons who are engaged, for instance, to help transport Federal prisoners from the place of conviction to the place of incarceration.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. It extends the act only to that extent?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is all that I know of.

Mr. KELLER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what does this bill do?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It gives such persons Federal protection and makes it a Federal offense to kill persons who are engaged in aiding in the transportation, for instance, of prisoners.

Mr. KELLER. It does not put them under civil service?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; it does not apply to deputy marshals; just persons hired for the job. It also applies to persons who may be called in to help a Federal marshal effect an arrest in a particular situation.

Mr. KELLER. That is all right.

Mr. FADDIS. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, would that include a chauffeur, a man driving a vehicle?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am not sure that that would be true.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. It would be a question of construction. If that person were construed to be a person employed to assist a United States marshal or deputy United States marshal, it would. This bill is intended to cover into the provisions of the act individuals who are appointed or employed by a United States marshal or deputy marshal to assist in making an arrest or in dealing with prisoners.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of May 18, 1934 (ch. 299, 48 Stat. 780), as amended (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 253), be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That whoever shall kill, as defined in sections 273 and 274 of the Criminal Code, any United States marshal or deputy United States marshal or person employed to assist a United States marshal or deputy United States marshal, any officer or employee of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, post-office inspector, Secret Service operative, any officer or enlisted man of the Coast Guard, any employee of any United States penal or correctional institution, any officer, employee, agent, or other person in the service of the customs or of the internal revenue, any immigrant inspector or any immigration patrol inspector, any officer or employee of the Department of Agriculture designated by the Secretary of Agriculture to enforce any act of Congress for the protection, preservation, or restoration of game and other wild birds and animals, any officer or employee of the National Park Service, any officer or employee of, or assigned to duty in, the field service of the Division of Grazing of the Department of the Interior, or any officer or employee of the Indian field service of the United States, while engaged in the performance of his official duties, or on account of the performance of his official duties, shall be punished as provided under section 275 of the Criminal Code."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SERVICE OF PROCESS ON THE UNITED STATES IN FORECLOSURE ACTIONS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7020, to amend section 2 of the act of March 4, 1931 (46 Stat. 1528), in regard to service of process on the United States in foreclosure actions.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act of March 4, 1931 (46 Stat. 1528; U. S. C., title 28, sec. 902), be amended to read as follows:

"Service upon the United States shall be made by serving the process of the court with a copy of the bill of complaint upon the United States attorney for the district or division in which the suit has been or may be brought, or upon an assistant United States attorney or a clerical employee designated by the United States attorney in a writing filed with the clerk of the court in which suit is brought, and by sending copies of the process and bill, by registered mail, to the Attorney General of the United States at Washington, D. C. The United States shall have 60 days after service as above provided, or such further time as the court may allow, within which to appear and answer, plead, or demur."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRANSMISSION OF BUDGET IN YEARS IN WHICH A NEW PRESIDENT TAKES OFFICE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8307, to change the date of transmission to Congress of the Budget of the United States in years in which a new President takes office.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection a moment?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes, Mr. Speaker; I reserve it.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, under existing law, the President is required to transmit the Budget to Congress on the first day of each regular session thereof—section 201 of the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921.

As a matter of actual practice it never is sent in until the second or third day, depending upon the delivery of the annual message. The Budget usually follows the day after the annual message is delivered.

As the law now stands, Congress meets on January 3 of each year for the regular session.

The beginning of a Presidential term is on January 20.

With the transmission of the Budget required on the first day of the regular session, January 3, and a new President taking office on January 20, the situation arises of an outgoing President preparing completely and transmitting to Congress in accordance with and as required by law, a Budget for the fiscal year which begins July 1 next following the taking of office by a new President.

Under existing law, the outgoing President would prepare and transmit the Budget which would not go into effect until the new President had been in office for approximately 6 months.

This bill would permit the outgoing President, through the Bureau of the Budget and Federal agencies to proceed with the normal preparation of the Budget and advance the work as much as possible. It would prevent the transmission of the Budget to Congress. It would permit the incoming President to have until February 20, following his inauguration on January 20, to determine the kind of a Budget message he wished to incorporate in the Budget, and to determine the character of Budget he wished to present to Congress. A 30-day period should be sufficient to enable an incoming President to reach such conclusions and make such changes as he might desire in those items of the Budget which are not routine and which might be susceptible to changes based upon policy. The full 30 days might not be required and, in that event, the President could transmit his Budget earlier if he so desired.

A delay in the transmission of the Budget in any year until February would naturally delay the work of Congress in preparing the appropriation bills based upon that Budget; yet if the law is not changed, and the outgoing President sends in a Budget, and his successor taking office on January 20 differs with that Budget in policy or detail, and sends a modifying message to Congress remaking the Budget in essential particulars, there would be endless confusion and reconsideration with accompanying work of going over the ground again in the light of the new recommendations.

The bill would give a new President an opportunity to have something to say about the Budget for the first year of his new administration without the embarrassment of having to modify recommendations previously made by his predecessor for a period of Government during which the predecessor would not be President.

In years in which a President is inaugurated, the new Congress must be organized by the election of officers and the formation of committees. This often occupies considerable time, and the delay in the transmission of the Budget would not be entirely a loss of time under those circumstances.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. FISH. I want to say to my highly distinguished friend from North Dakota, in whom I have great confidence and respect, that the prime object of this bill is to give the new or incoming Republican President an opportunity to pass upon the Budget, and I hope my Republican friend will not object.

Mr. BURDICK. In view of that promise I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 201 of the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921, is amended to read as follows:

"The President shall transmit the Budget to Congress at each regular session thereof. The date of such transmission shall be not later than 5 days after the date of the convening of such session, except that the date of such transmission shall be not earlier than January 21, nor later than February 20, in a year in which the term of office of President of the United States begins, if the person whose term as incumbent of such office begins in such year is not the same person as the one whose term ends in such year. Each such Budget shall set forth in summary and detail:"

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRANSFER OF LAND AT VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION FACILITY, COATESVILLE, PA.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2867, to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to transfer by quitclaim deed to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., for right-of-way purposes, a small strip of land at Veterans' Administration facility, Coatesville, Pa.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer by quitclaim deed to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. the following-described property located at Veterans' Administration facility, Coatesville, Chester County, Pa.:

Beginning at a point, said point being marked by an iron pin and set in the southwest corner of the Veterans' Administration Reservation as now constituted, said point also being in the northerly right-of-way line of the Pennsylvania Railroad right-of-way and fifty feet distant from the center thereof; said point also being directly opposite center line station 1972 plus 28.5 of the eastern region, Eastern Pennsylvania Division, Philadelphia Division of the Pennsylvania Railroad; thence north, no degrees fifty minutes no seconds west along the westerly boundary line of the Government Reservation, a distance of forty-two and forty one-hundredths feet to a point; thence along a curve to the left having a radius of five thousand six hundred and forty feet, a distance of six hundred and thirty-one and ninety-seven one-hundredths feet, the chord of which curve bears south seventy-four degrees thirty-four minutes six seconds east, a distance of six hundred and thirty-one and sixty-four one-hundredths feet; thence south thirty-four degrees fifty-one minutes and no seconds west along one of the boundary lines of the Government Reservation, a distance of forty-three and thirty-one one-hundredths feet to a point, said point being in the northerly right-of-way line of the Pennsylvania Railroad right-of-way and fifty feet distant from the center thereof, said point also being directly opposite center line station 1966 plus 17.55; thence along a curve to the right having a radius of five thousand six hundred and eighty feet, a distance of six hundred and five and sixty-five one-hundredths feet the chord of which curve bears north seventy-four degrees thirty-three minutes twenty seconds west, a distance of six hundred and five and thirty-six one-hundredths feet; said curve being the south boundary line of the Government Reservation and the north boundary line of the Pennsylvania Railroad right-of-way to the point of beginning, containing in all an area of five hundred and sixty-eight one-thousandths acres, more or less.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. This concludes the consideration of all bills eligible for call on the calendar today.

RELIEF OF INDIANS WHO HAVE PAID TAXES ON ALLOTTED LANDS

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings by which the bill (H. R. 952) for the relief of Indians who have paid taxes on allotted lands for which patents in fee were issued without application by or consent of the allottees and subsequently canceled, and for the reimbursement of public subdivisions by whom judgments for such claims have been paid, was stricken from the calendar this morning, be vacated.

Mr. FADDIS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what bill is this?

Mr. CHURCH. The bill is H. R. 952.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I further reserve the right to object for the purpose of making an explanation. This is the bill which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] asked to have go over without prejudice. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK] objected to that request, whereupon there were three objections to the consideration of the bill through some misunderstanding. I have spoken to the gentleman from Missouri and also to the gentleman from North Dakota and it is agreeable to them that the bill be restored to the calendar and then be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 952) be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

SALE OF CERTAIN UNITED STATES LINES SHIPS TO A BELGIUM COMPANY

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, the sale and transfer of eight ships belonging to the United States Lines, including the President Harding, to a Belgium company on an exceedingly thin mortgage is a shocking violation of the letter and spirit of the American Neutrality Act.

The United States Lines chartered the ships, worth $4,000,000, on a bare-boat charter, without any American crew for a down payment of only $137,000. This means that the United States Lines has a first mortgage of 97 percent in these boats. What a farce and travesty of our neutrality, when an American company can continue to own 97-percent interest in the ships.

The approval of the United States Maritime Commission of this sale and transfer of American ships to a Belgium company for operation between New York, England, France, and Belgium is an outrageous subterfuge and breach of our neutrality. This transfer is far worse than the administration's previous attempt to turn these ships over to the Panamanian flag.

The fight in the Congress centered on keeping American ships out of belligerent areas, and now an arm of the Government proposes to send ships in which American companies have a major interest into the war zone.

The minute we turn our ships over to carry arms and ammunition to belligerent nations we must expect reprisals and direct attacks from submarines and raiders off our coast.

This transfer is a reckless disregard of the intent of Congress in the Neutrality Act, which had for its main purpose keeping American ships out of the war zones and ourselves out of war. The next step will be to fly American flags over these 97 percent American-owned ships.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a statement by the Commissioner of Reclamation as to the Grand Coulee Dam. Also, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include a statement by the Geological Survey showing the stream flow during the last year.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement in regard to the attitude of the American Federation of Labor on the poll tax.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include certain excerpts on vital material.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of labor conditions in New York, and to insert a brief statement by Luigi Antonini, of the American Labor Party.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PURCHASE OF LAND, TURTLE MOUNTAIN INDIAN AGENCY

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1036) to authorize the purchase of certain lands adjacent to the Turtle Mountain Indian Agency in the State of North Dakota, with House amendments thereto, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma, Mr. HILL, Mr. BURDICK.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Sioux Falls Daily Argus Leader.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 407, to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended. Pending that I ask unanimous consent that I may insert in my remarks certain newspaper articles to which I shall refer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the time for general debate has already been fixed by unanimous consent. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 407.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 407, with Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Joint Resolution 407

Resolved, etc., That the period during which the President is authorized to enter into foreign-trade agreements under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended by the act (Public, No. 316, 73d Cong.) approved June 12, 1934, is hereby extended for a further period of 3 years from June 12, 1940.

The CHAIRMAN. Under consent order of February 14 the time for general debate is fixed at 12 hours, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, since January 11 the Committee on Ways and Means has been giving continuous and careful consideration to House Joint Resolution 407, a resolution to extend the Trade Agreements Act, which is now before the House for consideration. That measure was first enacted in June of 1934, to be effective for a period of 3 years. In 1937 it was extended for an additional 3-year period, which will expire on June 12, 1940. At the time of its original enactment, and even, to some extent, upon the occasion of its extension in 1937, we were proceeding principally upon the basis of a strong hope and conviction that the reciprocal-trade program was the best means of curing the multitude of evils which had arisen under the Hawley-Smoot Act. We then dealt with hopes and beliefs; we now deal with concrete realities and factual evidence.

The Trade Agreements Act has been in operation almost 6 years, and there need be no further conjecture regarding its merits. There are sufficient facts before us to convince anyone who will give them unbiased and nonpartisan consideration of the virtues and success of the program. Very few public statutes or issues in the entire history of our Nation have been subjected to such widespread and critical examination. Through every channel of publication, the facts concerning this program have been placed before the American people, and its merits have been discussed and argued by almost every commentator on public affairs.

NEEDS FOR THE RECIPROCAL-TRADE PROGRAM

At the time of its enactment the Trade Agreements Act was not only the choice of all of the possible courses of action with respect to the tariff, but it was the only one having the elements necessary to success. Its adoption was a dire necessity if we were to stem the tide of calamity which was sweeping in upon us.

The Hawley-Smoot Tariff was enacted in June of 1930. However, the Congress began its consideration at a special session in April of 1929, called, ostensibly, for the purpose of a limited revision of the tariff to aid agriculture. It immediately became apparent that it was not to be a limited revision but an old-fashioned, logrolling tariff in the traditional Republican manner. Even Mark Sullivan describes this procedure as the typical Republican way. Not only this Nation, but the whole world saw what was coming. There immediately flocked to Washington a multitude of emissaries from the organized special interests. The representatives of each industry or interest had their pet object which must be protected at all costs. Logrolling, horse trading, and back scratching flourished as the contending factions maneuvered for position.

The best possible government is one whose primary consideration is the best interest and general welfare of its people as a whole. However, it is notorious that, in the consideration of the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act, as in other Republican tariff legislation, an absolutely contrary course was followed. No group or interest, not ably represented at that grab fest, was given more than secondary or passing consideration, and, judged by their actions, nothing could have been further from the minds of its sponsors than the general welfare of all the American people. Some of the most favored of the benefit grabbers actually attended the executive session of the Committee on Ways and Means, so I am reliably informed, while the Democratic members of the committee were excluded (read Hull's testimony). The experts and clerks of other favored groups were given desks in the committee rooms and became a part of the committee staff.

The connection between tariff benefits and service to the Republican Party was never stronger. Those who had responded most liberally when the campaign hat was passed had the loudest and most effective voices in the distribution of the pie.

Mr. Chairman, Hon. Cordell Hull, now Secretary of State, at that time was the ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means. He was not even permitted to sit in when the bill was under consideration in executive session. He was unable to find out what was in the bill until it had been already acted upon by the Republican members of the committee. That was the consideration given the minority members in the consideration of the Smoot-Hawley bill.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, in the consideration of the bill in the committee, as I recall, it was impossible except for Republican members of the committee to offer amendments.

Mr. DOUGHTON. They brought in a special rule to permit no amendments except those offered by the majority members of the committee. Still we hear our friends of the minority talk about star-chamber proceedings. That is mentioned in the minority report. Of all people who should never talk about secret or star-chamber proceedings, or steam-roller processes, our minority friends are the last that should ever utter a word in that regard.

Of the 10,681 lines in the Hawley-Smoot bill, only 82 were considered in the House. Of the 727 paragraphs included in the first and second sections of the bill, only 6 of them were read and considered. Of the 183 sections contained in the bill, only a small fraction of one of the sections was read and considered. There were only 4 pages of the 434 pages of the bill given any consideration. Of this procedure, Ragon, of Arkansas, a former member of the Ways and Means Committee, said:

As a fitting climax to this legislative horseplay which characterized the conduct of this bill through its consideration by the House, the Clerk read, as a part of the meager consideration of this bill, paragraph 2 * * *

A paragraph dealing with the chemical schedule.

During the formulation and enactment of the Hawley-Smoot legislation storm warnings were flying from every direction. More than a thousand leading economists predicted with prophetic accuracy the results which followed. It was pointed out that the only possible fruit of such evilly conceived and ill-considered legislation would be a disastrous effect upon our trade relations with foreign nations and, consequently, upon our own economy. The spokesmen of the Democratic Party and many leaders among the Republicans protested with all of the vigor at their command.

Our Republican friends contended with all the fervor of their souls that the Smoot-Hawley Act had nothing whatever to do with the depression of 1930 and afterward.

For instance, Mr. William Allen White, of Emporia, Kans., and editor of the Emporia Gazette, states:

One of the things that brought about the depression was the Smoot-Hawley bill. The Gazette said so at the top of its lungs before the Smoot-Hawley law was finally formulated, while it was passing, and after it had become a law. That tariff was an offense against economic stability not only in the United States but all over the world.

I have some testimony here by the minority leader, bearing on that same subject. Here is what the minority leader [Mr. MARTIN] said as reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

From 1930 on, world conditions continued to get progressively worse. No one recognized this fact more clearly than President Hoover and the Republican Members of the Congress. They saw that these world-trade barriers which restricted the intelligent flow of goods were causing the depression.

What produced those barriers but the Smoot-Hawley Act?

Messrs. Garver and Hansen, two of the leading economists of the country, spoke concerning this matter, as follows:

The Tariff Act of 1930, agitated in 1928—

That is when the country began to get alarmed—introduced in Congress in 1929 at the height of prosperity, and passed before the depression had become serious, intensified international difficulties. It gave the signal for the collapse of the tariff truce which had been prepared in Europe, and led to tariff retaliations in many countries.

That is what these disinterested authorities and able economists said on this subject:

They further stated:

Under the impact of the depression, the fall in prices, and the break-down of the international gold standard, tariffs almost everywhere were raised and other forms of trade restrictions were adopted, including rigid limitation of imports by means of fixed quotas and vigorous governmental control over foreign exchange.

I might read also for the edification of my brethren of the minority what the Washington Daily News of Monday, June 16, 1930, had to say editorially in this regard:

No one can explain away the disastrous effects of this suicidal legislation on American prosperity.

Here are the facts as recorded on just 1 day: On the day the bill passed Wall Street responded with a market drop which dragged several standard stocks even lower than in the November crash.

On the day the bill passed there was a general fall in commodity prices, bringing some to new low levels for the year.

On the day the bill passed all grain prices fell to new levels for the season—wheat went to the lowest price in a year, oats the lowest in 8 years, rye the lowest in 30 years.

On the day the bill passed the price of cotton declined to the lowest level in more than 3 years.

Our friends disclaim and deny any responsibility whatsoever for the depression, so far as the Smoot-Hawley Act is concerned. It is characteristic of our friends to always claim credit when the country is prosperous and conditions are favorable, but when the reverse is the case, they deny responsibility.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes; I yield to my friend.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Reminiscent of the passage of the bill and the figures quoted by the gentleman with reference to the fall on the stock market and agricultural prices, I recall quite vividly that the last argument made in favor of the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill was by our friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER], and his last words were that the sunshine of prosperity is now about to burst upon our great country in the passage of this great bill. I recall that I made the remark next day that the sunshine burst the wrong way, and it kept on bursting the wrong way continuously thereafter.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That was about the time that Mr. Hoover said that Republican policies would abolish poverty and that two cars would be in every garage and every pot would be filled with good fat chickens. That was about the same time as the remarks of the gentleman from New York, Dr. CROWTHER.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Not now. I do not have time.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Quoting further from the News:

On the day the bill passed European dispatches reported that the copper interests of Great Britain, Belgium, and Germany had agreed to retaliate by withdrawing large orders in the United States for copper and nonferrous metals, whereupon the American Copper Exporters' Association frantically cut prices.

On the day the bill passed, the Mexican Government officially announced it would erect retaliatory duties, which follows similar retaliation against us by Canada and others.

Not only Mexico but also other nations announced retaliatory duties, which followed similar action by Canada and other nations.

On the day the bill passed, the United States Department of Commerce announced that American exports dropped in May to the lowest point in the last 6 years.

When the Smoot-Hawley Act was under consideration our Republican friends were so sure that it was a panacea for all our ills and would cure all of our economic difficulties that Senator Watson, of Indiana, in the Senate made this very definite statement:

It is quite true that we are in the midst of a financial depression produced by manifest causes that I shall not here discuss and which do not pertain to this subject, but I here and now predict, and I ask my fellow Senators to recall this prediction in the days to come, that if this bill is passed this Nation will be on the upgrade financially, economically, and commercially within 30 days, and that within a year from this time we shall have regained the peak of prosperity and the position we lost last October, and shall again resume our position as the first and foremost of all the people of history in all the essential elements of individual and national greatness.

EFFECTS OF THE HAWLEY-SMOOT ACT

The storm warnings were unheeded, the counsel of the economists ignored, and the protests were lightly turned aside. The effects of the legislation were even more calamitous than its critics had predicted.

Agriculture, the already desperate plight of which had served as the excuse for the Grundy orgy, sank to unbelievably lower depths. The farm cash income of the United States dropped down from 11.2 billions of dollars in 1929 to 4.7 billions in 1932. By 1932, farmers were getting 30 cents a bushel for their wheat, notwithstanding the wheat tariff of 42 cents a bushel. They were getting only 10 to 20 cents a bushel for corn, even though the corn tariff was 25 cents a bushel. In Kansas and other States corn was being used for fuel. They were getting only 15 or 16 cents a pound for their butterfat, although the tariff on butter was 14 cents a pound. They were getting only 9 cents a pound for their wool, even though the wool tariff was 24 cents a pound. Cotton was selling for about 5 cents a pound. Millions of farmers lost their homes.

In retaliation against the excessive rates provided, other countries set up barriers equal to or greater than our own. The result was a complete deadlock, resulting in a gradually increasing paralysis of international trade and commerce. Our sales to other nations fell from over 5 billion dollars in 1929 to a little more than 1½ billions in 1932. The ruinous effects of the closing of export outlets for the great surplus-producing divisions of both agriculture and industry rapidly permeated every branch of our economic life. The reduced purchasing power of their employees and owners was immediately reflected in the consumption of articles produced for domestic use. This vicious cycle grew in intensity until American business, industry, and agriculture found themselves in the midst of utter ruin.

It was a particularly ironic justice that caused those groups and interests, who had clamored for and secured special protection under the Hawley-Smoot Act, to suffer from its iniquitous effects just as did their fellow citizens who had not received favored treatment. They had pulled the house down on themselves.

DEMOCRATIC ACTION TO SAVE THE NATION FROM "GRUNDYISM"

The present administration met the problem squarely with bold and vigorous action. Many purely domestic measures were taken to restore employment, relieve suffering and distress, rebuild prices, increase wages and values, save our farms and homes from mortgage foreclosures, rescue our factories and business houses from bankruptcy, make our banks and financial institutions safe depositories of the people's money, and to restore transportation and to improve all phases of our national economic life.

It was evident, however, that such action alone could not insure a full and stable prosperity unless our foreign trade could be revived. The only way this could be achieved was to remove the strangling shackles which the Hawley-Smoot tariff had wound about our commerce with other nations. Intelligent observers pointed out that unless we could see our national economy as a whole and could view national prosperity as a unit, we could never hope to place this Nation upon a permanently secure economic basis.

The basic philosophy which activated the Congress in the adoption of the Trade Agreements Act was founded in a realization that exports and imports are interdependent, and that nations, like individuals, cannot sell unless they buy. We knew that it would prove impossible to persuade other nations to modify their trade restrictions toward us, imposed to counteract the restrictions which we had raised against them, unless we stood ready to adjust our own trade barriers and correct our own mistakes. With international economic relationships so filled with swiftly changing complexities in which other governments have the means of speedy action, we believed it necessary for the legislative and executive branches of our Government to cooperate in providing the proper means of meeting these emergencies with action equally swift.

By the Reciprocal Trade Act the Congress placed in the hands of the Executive the authority and responsibility of administering this program, after first defining the policy to be followed, the limitations and restraints beyond which the powers granted do not extend, and the methods by which the purposes of the act are to be carried out. We believed and still believe, and the facts fully support our contention, that the program adopted was the best way to deal with the vexatious problem; and that it supplies the safest, surest, simplest, and only practical method of rebuilding our foreign trade on a secure basis.

SAFEGUARDS IN THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE PROGRAM

The Congress exercised the utmost caution, consistent with the speed and efficacy necessary to the success of the program, by surrounding the administration of the Trade Agreements Act with every possible safeguard. Under the provisions of the statute no agreement can be entered into until after due public notice shall have been given and all interested persons have had an opportunity to be heard and to present their views.

Moreover, section 4 of the Trade Agreements Act provides that before concluding any agreement "the President shall seek information and advice with respect thereto from the United States Tariff Commission, the Departments of State, Agriculture, and Commerce, and from such other sources as he may deem appropriate."

Pursuant to this provision an interdepartmental organization has been established on which five agencies are regularly represented, namely, the Departments of State, Agriculture, Commerce, and Treasury, and the United States Tariff Commission. Through this organization the agencies mentioned participate in the formulation of every detail of the trade agreements and no agreement has been entered into which has not been fully concurred in by them. In addition, a number of other departments and agencies are consulted with respect to special questions coming within their field and their information and views have been brought to bear upon the questions presented.

I am assured by the heads of the departments concerned that this organization and this procedure will be fully maintained with respect to any action taken under this authority in the future, not only as regards the question of concluding particular agreements but as regards the joint participation in the formulation of their terms down to the minutest detail.

This procedure and administration is in accordance with the intention of Congress when the existing statute was enacted. I desire to state that I urge the renewal of this act with that fact in mind.

In other words the State Department, the Department of Commerce, the Department of Agriculture, and the United States Tariff Commission all cooperated in working out and negotiating these trade agreements. I was informed today by the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Commerce as well as the Department of State that they have all cooperated 100 percent and that they have worked unitedly, that there has been no disagreement, that they have been in entire accord as to all of these agreements which have been negotiated. Is not this sufficient assurance that the purposes of the bill have been carried out, and likewise assurance that proper and necessary safeguards were thrown about the program?

There is also an Interdepartmental Trade Agreements Committee, made up of representatives of the departments and agencies of the Government, which directs all necessary studies, reviews the reports and recommendations of its subcommittees, and approves all details of the agreements subject to final approval by the Secretary of State and the President. Each agreement is further protected by an escape clause.

I am reliably informed that not only are the Department of State, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Commerce, and the Tariff Commission cooperating, but that also they call in the heads of other Departments and Bureaus and get advice from them, and secure the best information possible before these agreements are concurred in. Oh, the minority report says that notwithstanding they give hearings to all interested parties, hearings should be granted after the agreements are negotiated, after they are prepared and perfected. Think how perfectly ridiculous such a proposition is. It is just like saying that they should give hearings on a tariff bill after the committee has brought in its recommendation. They know that such a thing was never done. They know that such a policy would vitiate any program adopted. They know that no one could ever do anything like that. That is so asinine and so absolutely ridiculous that I am surprised that the minority representatives should suggest it. There would never be any end to negotiations.

Each agreement is further protected by an escape clause. I have a letter here from Secretary Hull on that subject amplifying his position and will place that in the RECORD:

FEBRUARY 8, 1940.

The Honorable ROBERT L. DOUGHTON,
Chairman, Ways and Means Committee,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. DOUGHTON: Replying to your inquiry relative to the escape or safeguarding clauses included in trade agreements and the policy of the Executive branch of the Government in putting them into operation, with special reference to the trade agreement with Venezuela, I would say that, in accordance with the general policy of providing flexibility in order to safeguard the interests of our domestic producers, an escape or safeguarding clause in unusually broad terms was included in the trade agreement with Venezuela. This clause permits remedial action whenever—to use the language of the agreement—"special circumstances" render it necessary or advisable to do so. The clause would permit such action with respect to petroleum or any other product included in the agreement.

I scarcely need to assure you that the operation of the trade agreements is given constant and careful supervision in order that remedial action may be taken whenever it appears that the producer of any product might be materially injured. Nor is it necessary to add that this statement applies to the concessions granted on petroleum and other products included in the Venezuelan agreement.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

Secretary Hull definitely and plainly states that, through the escape clause, if any mistakes are made, the injured party may have a hearing to show wherein he is injured. Through this escape clause any injurious effect of the trade agreements is remedied.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I am glad to yield to my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I call the attention of the gentleman from North Carolina to the fact that the late President McKinley, despite the efforts of our Republican friends to place a different construction upon what he said in the last speech he made before he was unfortunately assassinated, made the strongest appeal for reciprocal-trade agreements that I have ever heard expressed by anyone. In fact, his suggestions were nearly along the lines of the present law.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Absolutely. You could lay the statement of President McKinley alongside the words of Secretary Hull and hardly distinguish between them.

Here is what President McKinley said in his last speech:

We have a vast and intricate business, built up through years of toil and struggle, in which every part of the country has its stake, which will not permit of either neglect or of undue selfishness. No narrow, sordid policy will subserve it. The greatest skill and wisdom on the part of the manufacturers and producers will be required to hold and increase it. Our industrial enterprises, which have grown to such great proportions, affect the homes and occupations of the people and the welfare of the country. Our capacity to produce has developed so enormously and our products have so multiplied that the problem of our markets requires our urgent and immediate attention. Only a broad and enlightened policy will keep what we have. No other policy will get more. In these times of marvelous business energy and gain we ought to be looking to the future, strengthening the weak places in our industrial and commercial systems, that we may be ready for any storm or strain.

By sensible trade arrangements, which will not interrupt our home production, we shall extend the outlets for our increasing surplus. A system which provides a mutual exchange of commodities is manifestly essential to the continued and healthful growth of our export trade. We must not repose in fancied security that we can forever sell everything and buy little or nothing. If such a thing were possible, it would not be best for us or for those with whom we deal. We should take from our customers such of their products as we can use without harm to our industries and labor. Reciprocity is the natural outgrowth of our wonderful industrial development under the domestic policy now firmly established. What we produce beyond our domestic consumption must have a vent abroad. The excess must be relieved through a foreign outlet, and we should sell everywhere we can and buy wherever the buying will enlarge our sales and production, and thereby make a greater demand for home labor.

The period of exclusiveness is past. The expansion of our trade and commerce is the pressing problem. Commercial wars are unprofitable. A policy of good will and friendly trade relations will prevent reprisals. Reciprocity treaties are in harmony with the spirit of the times; measures of retaliation are not.

If perchance some of our tariffs are no longer needed for revenue or to encourage and protect our industries at home, why should they not be employed to extend and promote our markets abroad?

Had I not known by whom that statement was made I would have thought it came from Secretary Hull on the subject of reciprocity.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I make another inquiry? Has my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, any observations to make on the unfortunate situation that arose in the committee where the Republican members undertook to make this a political issue?

Mr. DOUGHTON. It was very unfortunate that a great economic question like this should be made a political issue; but from the very beginning of our hearings, at every turn, every day, every opportunity, it was perfectly manifest they were making political capital out of this question.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will not the gentleman admit that the tariff has been a political issue in this country from the very foundation of our Government?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes; but I will not admit it should be. Of course, it is an issue upon which the Republican Party has depended for its life and vitality. If you were to take that issue from it, I do not know on what source they would rely for campaign funds, and without campaign funds I do not know where it would be. It gives them a source of revenue to conduct their campaigns, and that is the cause of the desperate opposition to this legislation.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does not the gentleman know his own party endorsed the Republican Party policy with reference to the protective tariff, and does not the gentleman know every man on the Democratic side of the Committee on Ways and Means—

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not yield for a speech from the gentleman. I do not know that the Democratic Party has ever taken that position, and I hope it will never endorse everything that the Republican Party stands for in the way of a tariff. I would feel like quitting the Democratic Party if it committed a sin of that kind.

Mr. GEARHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GEARHART. I hope the Democratic Party never does fall as low as the gentleman pointed out, but likewise the gentleman rose to great heights when he referred to President McKinley. But whether the question of the tariff is a political one or not, I want the gentleman to know exactly what President McKinley did stand for, and with his permission may I read at this moment about three lines from what the former President had to say on this subject?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I cannot yield for a stump speech. The gentleman can use his own time.

Mr. GEARHART. I want to read a line or two.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I cannot yield. The gentleman can do that in his own time.

Mr. GEARHART. The gentleman quoted what President McKinley said.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not yield to the gentleman. The gentleman took more time to make stump speeches in committee than any other member. I decline to yield at this time for a political stump speech.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER. The statement to which the gentleman from California refers is in the minority report, which is available to all Members.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Of course it is there, and it will be distorted in every possible way in order to make capital out of it.

RESULTS OF THE PROGRAM

By inaugurating the trade-agreements program, under our great Secretary of State, Cordell Hull, we took a position of leadership in a movement to reverse the destructive trends of trade-destroying impediments and to open the way for a healthy expansion of mutually beneficial trade between our country and the rest of the world. Trade agreements have been concluded with 21 nations, including such important commercial countries as the United Kingdom and Canada, our 2 best customers. These agreements include 8 with European countries: namely Belgium, Sweden, the Netherlands, Switzerland, France, Finland, the United Kingdom, and Czechoslovakia, which has been terminated. One agreement has been concluded with Turkey, a near-eastern country, and, in the Western Hemisphere, the original agreement with Canada, effective on January 1, 1936, has been superseded by a new agreement, effective on January 1, 1939. Eleven agreements have been concluded with the following American republics: Cuba, Haiti, Brazil, Honduras, Colombia, Guatemala, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Ecuador, and Venezuela. One agreement, that with Cuba, became effective in 1934, 3 in 1935, 10 in 1936, 2 in 1937, 2 in 1938, and 3 in 1939.

Let us take notice of the effect of the reciprocal-trade agreements. The way to judge anything is by its effect, not what its opponents or proponents may say about it.

In 1929, our exports to those countries with which we now have trade agreements aggregated about $3,000,000,000. By 1933, sales to these countries had sunk to less than $1,000,000,000. In 1938, they had risen again to more than $2,000,000,000. Trade with these countries constitutes about 60 percent of our total foreign trade.

In the trade agreements thus far concluded with 21 countries, the foreign governments concerned have lowered their trade barriers on a wide range of American farm and factory products. The concessions obtained by the United States include duty reductions, enlarged quotas, and other mitigations of restrictive measures, as well as the binding of existing duties or free entry, on literally hundreds of items which enter into our export trade. Opponents of a liberal trade policy try to tell us that the concessions which we have obtained are of no benefit while those which we have granted are injurious.

They produced no evidence in support of the contention. That is the only statement that was made, but it is not supported by the facts. When you compare our trade with the countries with which we have negotiated trade agreements, with those countries with which we have no trade agreements, it will be shown conclusively the benefits that have flown from the enactment of these agreements.

Taking the years 1934 and 1935 as substantially a pre-agreement period, since only one agreement was in effect for the entire year of 1935, exports from the United States averaged two and two-tenths billion dollars. During the 2-year period 1937 and 1938, with 17 agreements in effect for most of the time, exports had increased to an average of three and two-tenths billion dollars.

That is an increase of $1,000,000,000 over the period before the agreements were entered into. We do not make exaggerated claims, or claims that cannot be supported by the facts.

While no claim is made that this entire trade increase was due to the advantages for American exports obtained by the United States in trade agreements, it is significant that during the period 1937-38, exports from the United States to countries with which reciprocal-trade agreements were in operation averaged 61.2 percent greater than during the 1934-35 period. Over the same periods, our exports to non-trade-agreement countries averaged only 37.9 percent greater.

INCREASED IMPORTS AND EXPORTS

A comparison of the average imports and exports with respect to both the trade-agreement and nonagreement countries for the years 1934 and 1935, as against those for the years 1937 and 1938, show the following results: For 1934-35, the yearly average of exports to the trade-agreement countries was $760,000,000. For 1937-38, this figure had risen to one billion two hundred and twenty-five millions, an increase of four hundred and sixty-five millions, or 61 percent. At the same time, our average imports from these same countries increased from $794,000,000 to 1934-35 to one billion seventy-four millions in 1937-38, an increase of two hundred and eighty millions or only 35 percent, as compared with the 61-percent increase in exports. This shows we were not out-traded in these agreements.

Using a like comparison regarding our trade with non-agreement countries, exports increased from one billion four hundred and forty-eight millions to one billion nine hundred and ninety-seven millions, an increase of five hundred and forty-nine millions, or 38 percent as compared to the 61-percent increase in the case of the trade-agreement countries. On the same basis, imports from the nonagreement countries increased from one billion fifty-seven millions to one billion four hundred and forty-eight millions, an increase of three hundred and ninety-one millions, or 37 percent.

Thus, in the case of the trade-agreement countries, exports have increased 61 percent while imports have increased 35 percent; while in the case of the nonagreement countries, imports and exports have increased in almost exactly the same proportion.

In this respect, Roger Babson, noted statistician, in an article appearing last Monday in the Washington Post, states:

This, in a nutshell tells the effectiveness of the program, its aid to jobs and industry.

And, in closing his article, he further states:

As statistician, I believe that the Hull trade pacts should be backed to the limit by every straight-thinking, unselfish, and honest American.

It is important to note not only that exports from the United States to the trade-agreements countries have gained relatively more than exports to non-trade-agreement countries, but also that the trade-agreement countries have generally increased their purchases of American products more than they have increased their purchases of the products of other countries. For example, in 1937 and 1938, Belgian imports for consumption from the United States were 81 percent and 100 percent, respectively, above imports during the pre-agreement year, 1934, while Belgian imports from all other countries were only 44 percent and 14 percent greater. In the 3 years 1936-38 of the first agreement with Canada, that country's imports from the United States averaged 42 percent greater than in 1934-35 as compared with an average gain of 22 percent in Canadian imports from countries other than the United States between the same periods.

BENEFITS TO AGRICULTURE

The benefits which American agriculture has derived from the operation of the trade-agreements program are substantial. The volume of agricultural commodities imported from trade-agreement countries has not increased to any greater degree than the volume of such imports from nonagreement countries. On the other hand, farm exports to the trade-agreement countries have increased 15 percent from 1935-36 to 1938-39, while exports to nonagreement countries have actually decreased 19 percent.

Valuable and substantial concessions have been secured from many foreign countries regarding our basic farm products such as corn, hogs, wheat, fruits, tobacco, lard, and many other items. Under this treatment, farm income rose from four and seven-tenths billions of dollars in 1932 to seven and six-tenths billions in 1938.

The increased consuming power of the industrial worker and city dweller, due to the beneficial effects of this program, has aided substantially in the improvement of the farmer's domestic market. In addition, allowing for the changes in the cost of living to the farmer, the farm income of 1938 represented at least 40 percent more purchasing power than such income for 1932.

These are substantial, concrete facts and not opinions, about which there can be no controversy. They stand as an insurmountable wall to those critics of the program who would have us abandon it and revert once more to particular protection of the special interest.

There was no evidence of any direct or serious injury. Those opposed to the program based their opposition on fear of what might occur. We vigorously contend that even if some slight direct injury has been sustained, it is more than compensated for by generally improved business throughout the country.

Even if some slight temporary hardship does result to some particular industry or minor group or interest, it is apparent that, in the long run, benefits will flow to every citizen through the improved national economy and general welfare of the country. We are not here dealing with local legislation which is aimed solely to the benefit of any section or group. Here we have national legislation in its broadest sense, with the welfare of the whole United States as its supreme goal.

MOST-FAVORED-NATION CLAUSE

I want to comment briefly upon the policy of equal treatment. Now, we have paid our Republican friends a great compliment by adopting the most-favored-nation policy from them. In some ways they do not seem to appreciate this compliment.

The increases in our exports to trade-agreement countries occurred not only because we obtained from such countries valuable tariff reductions and important mitigations of other restrictive measures but also because, through trade agreements, they have given us a guaranty of equal treatment. These assurances of nondiscrimination against our goods were secured through the application of the unconditional most-favored-nation principle.

For example, in the agreement with Canada, reductions due to a most-favored-nation treatment were obtained on some 600 items, covering $112,000,000, including a long list of grains and their products, iron and steel manufactures, and heavy machinery.

There has been a good deal said to the effect that countries with which we have trade agreements continue to discriminate against us. No evidence was presented to prove the statements. A list of countries was presented by one witness, but I was interested to note that the countries had not concluded trade agreements under the present act. Through trade agreements we have an effective instrument for maintaining a nondiscriminatory principle. We have not had an effective instrument outside of trade agreements.

Obviously, when we demand and receive nondiscriminatory treatment from other countries, we must be willing to extend similar treatment to them. It is necessary insurance against one of the most injurious obstructions to trade to which our exports are exposed. Hence the Congress, in passing the Trade Agreements Act, wisely decided to continue nondiscriminatory treatment as the basis of our commercial policy. Accordingly the unconditional most-favored-nation principle—the only effective means of insuring nondiscriminatory treatment for exports—which has been employed in this country since 1923, has been embodied in our trade agreements.

We have generalized the tariff adjustments made in individual trade agreements to all countries which have been found to accord us substantially nondiscriminatory treatment. We have refused such generalization to countries which in turn refuse us such treatment. In this manner our most-favored-nation policy has been a means not only of improving our trade with the trade-agreement countries, but also a valuable instrument for safeguarding our trade position in other countries. The records of our recent hearings show that the advantages to us under this principle have been 8 or 9 to 1. That certainly, by no stretch of the imagination, can be considered a Santa Claus policy. This policy is followed because it is good business.

Mr. BUCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BUCK. The gentleman has noted in the minority report the statement that the exports were already on the increase at the time the trade-treaty program began. Is it not a fact that as a result of the Republican high-tariff, depression-creating policy our exports had reached such a low level in 1932 that any increase would have been a large gain?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Why, of course. There is no question about that. It had reached a death level.

Mr. BUCK. Is it not a fact that actually exports increased by $64,000,000 in 1933 over 1932 and by $522,000,000 in 1934 over 1933; so that there was a tremendous increase after the trade-agreement program went into effect?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes. If you do not manipulate the figures and state the facts just as they are, there is no question about that.

Mr. BUCK. In 1935 the exports were $150,000,000 greater than in 1934; in 1936, $323,000,000 above 1934; in 1937, $1,216,000,000 above 1934, an average of $739,000,000 every year from 1934 through to the year 1939.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I regret I do not have the time to yield now. I might yield for a brief question. I want to be fair.

Mr. MOTT. Suppose I ask a question, then. What was the value of our exports last year?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Does the gentleman mean our exports for 1939 to non-trade-agreement countries?

Mr. MOTT. No; the total amount, our total exports.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not know whether I have that figure right here. I can get it and put it in the Record; my recollection is our exports were $3,177,000,000.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Has any expert opinion been vouchsafed as to what percentage of these increases is attributable to our reciprocal-trade agreements?

Mr. DOUGHTON. There might be a difference of opinion about that, but when we show that the increase to countries with which we have the agreements is much larger than the increase to the countries with which we do not have trade agreements, it is a logical and reasonable conclusion that the greater increase to the countries with which we do have agreements is attributable to the agreements.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Particularly in view of the fact that there is no other chief reason for the increase?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not know of any other. I do not believe you can study the facts and reach any other reasonable conclusion.

Mr. COOPER. If the gentleman will yield, I believe I have the figures here.

Mr. MOTT. If the gentleman does not have the figures, I may say that I have the figures for the first 11 months of 1939.

Mr. COOPER. The total exports of the United States for 1939 were $3,136,000,000, or an increase of 42 percent over the pre-trade-agreement years 1934 and 1935.

Mr. MOTT. They increased only a fraction of a percent over 1929?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I did not yield to the gentleman to make a stump speech. I do not have the time. The gentleman will get time from his side to make his speech.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman misunderstands; I was asking a question. I say that is an increase of only a fraction of 1 percent over the exports for 1929.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman can make his own calculation.

Mr. MOTT. I am asking the gentleman.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman will not dispute the fact that there has been an increase over—

Mr. MOTT. Over 1929? I do dispute it.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Since the trade agreements over the prior years.

Mr. MOTT. Over the depression years of 1931 and 1932, certainly, but not over the year 1929, when there was no depression. The figures show that our exports now are no greater than they were then.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman does not deny the fact that there has been a decided improvement over the years when the Hawley-Smoot Act was in effect. There is no denial. The facts will not support a denial.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to read a telegram that should have gone in the hearings but was not received until after the hearings were closed. This is from Clarence Poe, editor of the Progressive Farmer and Southern Ruralist, an agricultural paper that has as wide a circulation as any farm paper in the United States. He is not a politician, and he is not trying to make any political capital of this or to deceive anyone. He has made as thorough and careful a study of this subject from the standpoint of the interest of agriculture as any man, perhaps, in the entire country.

The telegram reads as follows:

Hon. R. L. DOUGHTON, RALEIGH, N. C., February 15, 1940.
Chairman, House Committee on Ways and Means:

I earnestly hope you and your committee will do everything in your power to secure an extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. I believe present world conditions make it imperative that America follow this procedure in order to restore international trade and that the labors of a man so able, patriotic, and well informed as Cordell Hull will result in gains to American agriculture far offsetting some incidental losses. As a past master of the North Carolina State Grange I especially regret what I believe the mistaken attitude of Mr. TABER on this issue. Since I find it impossible to reach Washington at this time I shall be glad if you will read to your committee this statement, which am confident is for the best interests of the 950,000 southern farmers who read our magazine.

CLARENCE POE,
President and Editor, Progressive Farmer and Southern Ruralist.

Also a telegram from Mr. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 18, 1940.
Hon. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON,
Washington, D. C.:

The last American Farm Bureau Federation convention, representing farmers in 39 States, endorsed without a dissenting vote continuance of reciprocal-trade agreements. All agreements to be approved by Secretaries of State, Commerce, and Agriculture. We respectfully urge your support of House Joint Resolution 407.

EDW. A. O'NEAL,
President, American Farm Bureau Federation.

LXXXVI—104

The benefits which American agriculture have derived from the operation of the American trade-agreement program are substantial. I am trying to give the gentleman some information about the effect on agriculture now. The volume of agricultural commodities imported from countries with which we have negotiated trade agreements has not increased to any greater degree than the volume of such imports from nonagreement countries, which are affected only by the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act. On the other hand, farm exports to trade-agreement countries have increased 15 percent from 1935-36 to 1938-39, while exports to non-trade-agreement countries have actually decreased 19 percent. In other words, we have increased our exports of farm commodities to countries with which we have had trade agreements and have lost in exports to countries with which we have not had trade agreements. I am sure this cannot be challenged.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MURRAY. Does that include the Canadian treaty or is that the general figure?

Mr. DOUGHTON. This has reference to all the treaties with respect to farm commodities.

Valuable and substantial concessions have been secured from many foreign countries regarding our basic farm products, such as corn. We have an exportable surplus of corn. We have secured concessions on corn, hogs, wheat, fruit, tobacco, lard, and many other items for which we must have an export market if we are to secure anything like living prices for these farm commodities. Cattle is about the only farm commodity that is above parity. How much further below parity would these farm commodities be were it not for our export trade which has been vitally and effectively stimulated by these trade agreements? Under this treatment farm income rose from $4,700,000,000 in 1932 to $7,600,000,000 in 1938.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I will yield for a question to my colleague and friend on the committee. I do not yield for any statistics, because you can prove or disprove anything by statistics if they are manipulated.

When our exports of industrial commodities are increased or stimulated, that gives better prices for farm commodities at home, because the more people who work in industries, whether for domestic consumption or for exports, that provides a better market for the consumption of farm commodities.

There was no evidence of any direct or any serious injury to any agricultural interests.

Those who oppose the program base their opposition on fear of what might happen. Of course, you could have fears about any subject and never move in any direction. If we are always looking for a ghost we would never make any progress, because in any kind of legislation there is more or less risk or uncertainty and the success of any program can only be determined by its administration and its effects or results.

We seriously contend that even if any slight or indirect injury has been sustained, this is more than compensated by the general improved conditions throughout the country brought about by the Trade Agreements Act. More than that, let me repeat that in the administration of this law, the Secretary of State, whose judgment, ability, experience, and patriotism cannot be questioned, has assured us that every possible safeguard is thrown around the domestic producer in order to protect him from any serious injury under the escape clause provided in these agreements, and in case injury is shown, prompt and effective action will be taken as stated in Secretary Hull's letter which I have already placed in the RECORD, in order to remove the danger of any injury that might come to any domestic industry. I do not know what more could be expected.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CARLSON. The gentleman has on at least two occasions mentioned the escape clause with which we are all familiar.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. CARLSON. It is a fact, is it not, that it has not been used at any time?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not know that there has been any special necessity for it being used, because no case of injury has been shown, but we are assured it will be used if necessary or if there is any occasion for it. I cannot yield for a speech to my friend, who is an able member of our committee, because I want to conclude my remarks, but I will yield for a question.

Mr. CARLSON. Does not the gentleman think that the zinc producers of the United States produced a pretty good case of injury?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not think so, because of the fact it was shown, I think, by conclusive evidence they were in a very, very prosperous condition. So I do not see how any great injury can occur to an industry when it is very prosperous. Perhaps they expect too much.

Here is something that ought to be of interest to the American people. They are intelligent and they are following these questions carefully. No question has been more thoroughly debated nor is better understood by the people than the question of trade agreements. Dr. George Gallup recently conducted a poll, shown in the Washington Post, and that poll shows that 71 percent of the people of the United States favor the reciprocal-tariff program. The poll further shows that the ratio or percentage of Republicans and Democrats that favor this program are about the same.

Mr. SANDAGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. SANDAGER. What percentage of the people had no knowledge of the trade agreements?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Oh, if the gentleman wants to question the knowledge of the people of the United States, he can do it. I would not want to do that. I do not think the gentleman can afford to do that, and I think the gentleman would want to take that out of the RECORD—any statement to the effect that our people are not intelligent. Seventy-one percent are for the reciprocal-trade program, the poll shows. Then there was a nonpartisan poll taken by the Economic Policy Committee, composed of outstanding economists from various universities. They polled the leading economists of the Nation regarding their reaction to the reciprocal-trade program, and out of 552 leading economists, replies favoring the program were received from 550. Every poll taken shows the same trend. A survey of the national press of the country, irrespective of party, was taken, and that shows that 82 percent of our newspapers—Republican and Democrat—favor reciprocal-trade agreements and only 9 oppose it. The others are noncommittal. That is 82 to 9—a little more than 9 to 1. I think that that would be occasion for thought on the part of some of my friends before they go before the country and make this a political issue.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I am sorry I cannot yield, as I have not time.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman is mistaken so far as one newspaper that I know of is concerned, anyway.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Oh, one out of a thousand. What does that mean? If I could not name more than one, I would say nothing.

I shall read now a brief editorial which I think is very pertinent, and which appeared yesterday, February 18, 1940, in the Baltimore Sun. That editorial reads as follows:

DEBATING POINTS AGAINST THE HULL PROGRAM

We have not had access to the complete text of the report of the Republican minority of the Ways and Means Committee on the trade agreements bill, but to judge by the rather full accounts of this document in the Washington dispatches, it is in the best tradition of the high school debating societies. The Republican critics of the Hull program show no grasp of fundamentals. On the contrary, they seem to have been content to make "points" against the reciprocal-trade agreements wherever points could be found, without reference to any coherent and consistent theory of their own.

A prime example of the debating-society technique is the argument that the trade agreements have not prevented the outbreak of the European war. Minority members of the committee made much of this argument during the hearings. It was and is their only answer to the insistence of the proponents of the trade agreements that no solid organization of world peace would be possible except under a system providing for mutually profitable exchanges of goods and services between nations in a free market and that the trade-agreements program affords the best American approach to such a system. To undertake to belittle this fundamental truth by harping on the fact that the European war has broken out since the trade-agreements program was initiated is to pit juvenility against statesmanship.

All the other debating points against the Hull program find a place in the minority report. That document includes even a proposal for a substitute program, which suggests that perhaps those who attack and belittle the trade agreements have a glimmer of perception that something along the lines of the present policy is needed in the modern world. But the Republicans do not undertake to outline their substitute. That would not be in accord with debating-society technique. Instead, they propose to leave the matter for further study and for decision at some future date—which date, it is sadly to be feared, would be long postponed if the minority party had its way. For the truth is that, while the Republicans originated the idea of reciprocal-tariff bargaining, they have never been able to stop giving special favors to tariff-protected industries long enough to put the idea to effective use. The McKinley tariff of 1890 and the Dingley tariff of 1897 provided for reciprocity agreements with other countries, but, as Dr. F. W. Taussig points out in his Tariff History of the United States, actual results under those provisions were of small value and short duration.

It has remained for the present Secretary of State, Mr. Cordell Hull, to work out a practical application of the system and to give it breadth and scope and promise for the future. His achievements are no doubt bitter pills for the supporters of Fordney and McCumber and Hawley and Smoot to swallow, but they make good medicine for the country, and the renewal of the Hull prescription is well justified.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. If I have made a misstatement, I would be very glad to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina has consumed 1 hour.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina may proceed until he concludes his statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Will the gentleman please supply the House with the names and addresses of the thousand economists who are in favor of this program?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman knows that this occurred. It never has been denied.

Their names were given at the time the Smoot-Hawley tariff law was enacted.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I am sincere about it. I would like to know.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not know that I can get the names of all of them, but it never has been questioned, as far as I know. If it is important to the gentleman I can verify it. I do not know that I could give the names of all of them. I do not know of any economist of any reputation whatever that took issue with them. More than a thousand of them came out in favor of it.

WOMEN'S ORGANIZATIONS

It will be interesting, I am sure, to know what the women's organizations of the country think with regard to the trade-agreements program.

The principal women's organizations of the country were represented at the hearings just completed, and each and every one of these groups unanimously endorsed the trade-agreements program.

Mrs. Frederic Beggs, appearing for the General Federation of Women's Clubs, stated, among other things, as follows:

The Federation of Women's Clubs has in its membership more than 2,000,000 women. We have fifteen-thousand-some-odd clubs, and that means that there are 2,000,000 potential voters.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes; I yield to the lady.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Were those statements from those women's clubs given before or after the hearings?

Mr. DOUGHTON. They were given during the hearings.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I asked because, after spending about a week going through these hearings, I did not see anything like that.

Mr. DOUGHTON. They were given during the hearings, and I can refer the lady to the page, chapter, and verse.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Since these hearings were concluded have you had any statements?

Mr. DOUGHTON. No; not since the hearings were concluded. You would not expect them to reverse themselves in 2 weeks, would you? [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. The statement to which the gentleman has referred will be found on page 2201 of the printed hearings, as well as all the other statements.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes; and I would commend that to the prayerful consideration of the gentle lady from Illinois. [Laughter.]

Mrs. Beggs says further:

So I am really representing a very special interest as a large group of purchasers. And I am also representing a large body of public opinion in this country.

We are glad, as I have said before, that these hearings are being held, and I want to add a personal word, if I may, in the form of a good, solid, Republican conviction that leaders of the opposition party, to which I have the honor to belong, will not be showing particularly good judgment if they introduce the reciprocal trade-agreements program in the campaign of 1940 as a partisan issue because there are far too many Republicans who understand the issues involved and who are ready to rise spontaneously to the support of the program.

Mrs. Harris T. Baldwin, representing the National League of Women Voters, said:

The National League of Women Voters wishes to express its support of reenactment of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act * * * (p. 2205).

Finally, it has opened the way to overcome foreign-trade obstacles and to gain foreign-trade advantages through the reciprocal-trade agreements (p. 2207).

* * * We are equally convinced that the best interests of the United States will be served by keeping the program as a means of promoting sane international trade relations when wars abroad end (p. 2208).

Mrs. J. Austin Stone, representing the National Women's Trade Union League of America, said:

I represent the National Women's Trade Union League of America, which has a direct and affiliated membership of over a million (p. 2210).

Before concluding, I should like to say a word about the change in world conditions since the program was adopted. It is, of course, a peacetime measure; and some persons argue that because there is now war in other parts of the world, it is of no value and might as well be allowed to lapse. The Women's Trade Union League is convinced that this would be a tragic mistake both from the standpoint of labor and from that of the Nation as a whole. * * * It is of the utmost importance to keep machinery alive by which, when peace does come, the flow of world trade may be quickly resumed; and, in spite of many difficulties, the trade-agreements program has already demonstrated its great usefulness in this respect (p. 2212).

Let me say to the gentle lady from Illinois that not a single woman appeared before the committee in opposition to this. All four of the women who did appear were among the most intelligent I have ever known. They appeared before our committee representing large organizations and spoke in support of the program. Not a single woman appeared there to utter one word in opposition to it. That must be very, very singular.

Dr. Caroline F. Ware, representing the American Association of University Women, stated:

I am here to speak from the point of view of the American consumer in support of the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. * * *

The American Association of University Women, which I represent, is an association of more than 65,000 members who are graduates of colleges and universities of high standing. * * *

My association has joined with the American Home Economics Association, numbering 15,000 professional members, and another 70,000 in student groups, and with the General Federation of Women's Clubs of over 2,000,000 members, in forming, with representatives of retail organizations, the National Consumer-Retailer Council.

The reciprocal trade-agreements program constitutes the first sustained effort on the part of the Government to consider the needs of the consumers as well as the desire of producers in the formulation of national tariff policies. Although consumers are the largest economic interest in the population, for we are all consumers, they have not been heard in the process of tariff making in the past (pp. 2213, 2214).

Dr. Ware, on page 2217, also has the following to say:

By means of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, American consumers have begun to secure consideration in the development of tariff policies. We do not want to go back. We urge the extension of the act in order that we may retain this small gain, at least until such time as the paramount interest of Americans as consumers receives wider recognition in all aspects of our national life, and production and trade are seen as means to an end, not as ends in themselves. We urge the Representatives of all districts to think not only of factories but of homes.

I cannot conclude my remarks in support of this farsighted and extremely beneficial program without rendering tribute to the one man, above all others, whose statesmanship, broad experience, wisdom, foresight, tact, and perseverance have made the administration of the reciprocal-trade program so successful. In my opinion, the Honorable Cordell Hull is one of the greatest Secretaries of State this Nation has ever produced. His outstanding public service and untiring, intelligent efforts to improve our relations with other countries specially entitle him to the unanimous acclaim of every citizen, not only of our own country but of all the nations of the world.

He has earned and has been given a place in the minds and hearts of his countrymen that will remain so long as our Nation endures. Statesman, scholar, thinker, and man of action, his record will stand as a monument which neither the passage of time nor the achievements of others can ever dim or destroy.

I thank you. [Applause.]

EXCERPTS FROM EDITORIALS

The American manufacturer and the American farmer are just about the most efficient in the world. The much vaunted cheap foreign labor, generally much more poorly equipped and managed, cannot displace them in the world markets in a fair fight.

This is illustrated in Venezuela which last year purchased $52,000,000 worth of goods from the United States. That was 56 percent of all its outside purchases.

Why didn't the cheap foreign labor of other countries get this business? It was because it couldn't deliver such articles as wheat, prepared milk, radios, lard, steel products, refrigerators, paints, and other items. * * *

Trade across international borders, as well as within a nation, provides more business, more wealth to consume, more jobs, more prosperity. (Knickerbocker News (Independent Republican), Albany, N. Y., November 11, 1939.)

Prior to the adoption of the original Trade Agreements Act in 1934, tariff legislation had been going from bad to worse. Advocates of prohibitive duties on sugar got together with advocates of high duties on wool, and the two groups collaborated with those who wanted high duties on cheese and butter and beef, and the result was an orgy of logrolling in which the interests of the Nation as a whole were forgotten. * * * (Baltimore Sun (Independent Democrat), January 12, 1940.)

* * * Most of those who are today attempting to destroy our trade program by making insupportable charges that it is injuring agriculture are the same false prophets who solemnly assured the farmers that the Hawley-Smoot embargoes would guarantee to them full and permanent prosperity; whereas, in actual fact, within 2 years from the enactment of the 1930 tariff, millions of farmers found themselves in or on the verge of bankruptcy. * * * Analysis of the results obtained under the trade-agreements program reveals that between 1935 and 1938 our exports of farm products to trade-agreement countries increased by nearly 50 percent, whereas to other countries they actually declined slightly. (The Times (Independent Democrat), Bayonne, N. J., December 5, 1939.)

* * * Does the United States want to trade or not? That is the larger issue. If it wishes to develop the great opportunity for exports to Latin America it must learn to take imports. And if it wishes to build Pan Americanism on sound economic foundations the United States must put trade which would benefit the Nation as a whole ahead of local fears of competition. (Christian Science Monitor, January 9, 1940.)

The object of the reciprocal-trade treaties has consisted in promoting commerce among nations through a reduction of tariffs. Like all economic problems broadly affecting the Nation, it should be approached dispassionately. It is unfortunate, therefore, that Secretary of State Hull, who has labored long, arduously, and sincerely in behalf of the trade pacts, is now obliged to confront palpably partisan and unsubstantiated claims tending to disparage his accomplishments. * * * (Boston Transcript (Independent Republican), December 9, 1939.)

* * * Whether the name "reciprocal-trade program" endures is not important, but the principles will have to be retained. Either we market these surpluses abroad or we must be content with want and plenty. (The News (Republican), Cleveland, Ohio, December 4, 1939.)

For the first time tariff problems are being handled honestly and scientifically. * * * It would be a political and economic crime to go back to the scandalous methods of Smoot-Hawley days. (The Times, Chicago, Ill., November 28, 1939.)

It is unfortunate that the tariff is being drawn once more into party politics, after a period of 5 years of relatively scientific tariff making. The trade agreements have been imperfect, of course. But they represent an immense step forward from the logrolling tactics Congress used for decades previously in the framing of tariffs. They also represent the most important contribution the United States can make toward a more tolerable world order. (Cincinnati Enquirer, November 29, 1939.)

Shall individual interests fix tariff rates to their own liking, let the volume of foreign trade fall where it may, or does volume of trade have a prior right as an item of national public welfare? * * * We believe that stimulating foreign trade is an essential part of stimulating private enterprise. * * * (The News (Republican), Cleveland, Ohio, January 8, 1940.)

The Hull reciprocal-trade agreements are under fire in Washington, and the fire will get hotter and hotter as we get nearer into 1940 with its conventions and election. * * * The voter, therefore, will do well to remember several things when the proposed barrage is laid down against the Hull agreements. He should remember that politics has much to do with it. He should remember, when his selfish interests are appealed to, that what may touch him lightly, if at all adversely, may be for the good of the Nation and the world as a whole. (The Democrat (Democrat), Davenport, Iowa, November 29, 1939.)

Conceivably there have been some minor inequities, involving particular farm products; these are matters of detail and are righted as rapidly as possible. But if the farmer has any recollection of the early 1930's he will take a long look before deserting the trade-agreement program. (The Register (Independent), Des Moines, Iowa, November 28, 1939.)

Think it over, farmers: * * * Again, now, as in the 1936 campaign, the air is full of assertions that American agriculture is being victimized for the benefit of American manufacturing industries by the trade-agreements program, which aims at cautious lowering of international-trade barriers.

In 1936 the phrase was "sold down the river."

Since all the preposterous charges in that period about our farmers having been victimized proved false alarms, this phrase is less used now. But it will probably bob up again. * * *

Every powerful industrial influence that in the past, during all of our times, has been fighting to benefit itself through sky-high tariff protection, at enormous cost to agriculture and to all other consumers of "protected" industrial products, is energetically behind the drive to destroy the trade-agreements program. Why?

Think it over, Mr. Farmer. (Des Moines Register (Independent), January 7, 1940.)

One of the major objectives of the reciprocal policy has been the opening of international channels of trade. It does not abandon protection, but it makes concessions in order that these channels may be developed, providing a greater two-way traffic between this country and other nations. In this broad policy it is the intent to gain benefits for a broad field of American products instead of following the narrow policy of giving absolute protection to a few at the expense of the many. * * * (The Press (Independent), Grand Rapids, Mich., December 9, 1939.)

The trade agreements represent the best way to open foreign markets, which the farmer must have for the sake of his own surpluses and which the industrial worker must have if he is to keep at work and be in a position to buy agricultural goods. To an extent that can hardly be measured, the farmer depends upon the trade agreements to maintain his markets, both foreign and domestic. * * *

The Republicans may as well realize that they cannot win the next Presidential election merely by an inchoate, contradictory appeal to the prejudices of varied blocs of voters. Such a program was attempted in 1936, and it failed miserably. If the Republicans are to win, they must convince the voters that they have a program of action that in both its domestic and its foreign aspects makes consistent sense. Reciprocal-trade agreements are an integral part of such a program, for they offer the only feasible device by which surpluses, both agricultural and industrial, can find their way into foreign markets, thereby making for prosperity at home and for peace abroad. For further particulars, read the last speech of that great Republican protectionist, William McKinley. (The Courant (Republican), Hartford, Conn., November 25, 1939.)

Much has been written about the moral obligation of the United States to use her vast economic power to create a better world, in which advantages will be more equitably distributed. In such a world, it is admitted, the threat of war would be diminished greatly.

We hope some Republican orator or the spokesman for some protectionist industry will explain how that can be done by returning to the Smoot-Hawley tariff philosophy. (The Post, Houston, Tex., November 28, 1939.)

The last Republican tariff, enacted in 1930, was directly responsible for the establishment of foreign-trade barriers against American commerce. It aided in destroying the farmer's market. Hundreds of economists warned against its effects. Even Herbert Hoover signed it reluctantly. But the grabbing, selfish interests had their way. American industry and agriculture, instead of being protected, were dealt a crushing blow in those early depression years when they needed a stimulant rather than a club. * * *

The trade agreements rank with social security and bank-deposit insurance among the reforms made in the last 7 years. To abolish them would be a senseless step backward. (The Journal (Independent), Kansas City, Mo., January 8, 1940.)

The protective tariff is a game of boycott at which two can play, and every country in the world has played to its own hurt. When a European settlement is reached, we may find ourselves competing with a united world, including South and Central America, unless we do some adjusting beforehand. Industrialists and financiers have begun to realize this; but an old generalization is revived to fool the farmers. * * * The real organized and financed fight against the New Deal is waged by those who wish to regain financial control of the Nation. Farmers have only to look back over the last half century to see what that would do to agricultural policies. (The Courier Journal, Louisville, Ky., December 7, 1939.)

That dairy farmers of Wisconsin have probably been fed more misinformation and falsehood on the reciprocal-trade agreements than on any other single subject affecting the interests of agriculture. * * * (The Times (Independent), Madison, Wis., December 13, 1939.)

The response to the Hoover-Grundy law was reprisals by 29 nations, among them Canada, our most important customer. There was no unfriendliness in this; there was only recognition that a producer must buy from those who buy from him. It is the way he has of paying.

The only blow struck at the Hawley-Smoot tariff in the 9 years since its enactment has been the Hull trade agreements. * * *

Politicians love a tariff issue. It saves them from having to think. The Republican Party for years pointed out to the farmer that what he produced was on the free list. It gave him a higher duty and put a countervailing duty on manufactures the farmer had to buy, thus taking from agriculture any gains it possibly could have made.

The same old talk is being revived today by men looking for a befogging issue to reelect them next year. * * * The Republican Party's policy of tariff subsidies to manufacturers with deceiving lip service to agriculture, pursued from the Civil War on, nearly wrecked this country in the 1920's and early thirties. Is it the idea of Republican leaders that they should finish the job? (The Journal (Independent), Milwaukee, Wis., December 3, 1939.)

The best and surest way to scuttle the reciprocal-trade program would be to require Senate ratification of trade treaties negotiated by the executive branch of Government, a procedure which many Senators favor. * * *

It would be a major mistake if the reciprocal treaties, which already have proven their worth in boosting foreign trade and stimulating domestic production, were now to be cast to the mercies of lawmakers, who would seize upon them to make political capital and to help them in their "horse-trading" deals with their colleagues. * * * (The Star Journal (Independent), Minneapolis, Minn., December 28, 1939.)

A lot of us are inclined to approve of Secretary Hull's trade policy as applied to all lines except our own. * * * Some people are beginning to suspect that we can't increase sales abroad unless we increase purchases. It's about time for a serious study of this whole question by the public and by Congress. * * * (The News (Independent), Minot, N. Dak., December 4, 1939.)

This opposition to the reciprocal-trade program, which many consider a prescription for lasting peace if universally accepted, must be resisted by the Nation. The country's national welfare must not be subjugated to selfish private interests. For how can the United States expect to sell abroad while refusing to buy in return? (The Register (Independent Democrat), Mobile, Ala., November 28, 1939.)

If the treaty opponents can't kill the program they would like to suspend it. Their argument is that the war has so disturbed trade conditions as to make the effect of the agreements uncertain. But that probably is a cloak hiding other reasons which won't stand open discussion. It certainly is not convincing. If the treaties have had the effect of creating order and confidence in the trade between nations, it stands to reason that steadying influence will be most needed now and after the war. It is conceivable that in the post-war confusion the treaty system might become the solid mooring post to which the world can tie its foreign-trade relations. On the other hand, there probably could be no better way to breed more chaos than by continued pursuit of the theories of high tariffs, self-sufficiency and isolation. (Times-Picayune, New Orleans, La., December 6, 1939.)

To strike at the trade-agreements policy will be to strike a blow at peace and international cooperation. To renew the policy will be to reassert our faith that nations are not mere competitors in a ruthless struggle for markets, but mutual customers, dependent on each other and able to supply one another's essential needs in a spirit of equality and good will. (New York Times, December 19, 1939.)

To return to the logrolling and political deals of the patchwork tariff days, and thereby invite repetition of inevitable reprisals, would be a definite step backward—in trade as well as in the promotion of world peace. (The Oregon Journal (Independent-Republican) Portland, Oreg., December 26, 1939.)

Facts, not emotional prejudices, the whole rather than the partial effect of the Hull agreements, should determine their fate. (The Oregon Journal (Independent-Republican) Portland, Oreg., January 8, 1940.)

The Smoot-Hawley tariff was in many parts simply a bill to highjack the American consumer. It is still on the books because it seemed better trading to get from other nations a lower tariff on our imports than just to lower our barriers hoping they would go big-hearted, too, and lower theirs out of Christian charity. That was what the trade agreements now under fire, tried to do. * * * They do not show great harm to any important group in agriculture, industry, or labor, but show a great good to all groups, to all consumers, to reemployment and the country as a whole.

So what's all the shooting for? Obviously it is either to protect the Smoot-Hawley schedules or it is an effort, in a new high-carnival of old-time logrolling lobbying, to soak the consumer with even higher rates. (One Man's Opinion, by Hugh S. Johnson, Washington News, January 10, 1940.)

If the volume of foreign imports is further restricted and their price raised, several effects on American business are inevitable: American consumers must pay more for some of the things they need; American manufacturers must pay more for some of their raw materials. The result will be to raise their expense of doing business and to restrict the market for their product because of higher prices if they attempt to pass this added price on to the consumers. And finally, since imports are ultimately the only means that the outside world has of paying for American goods—barring a certain amount of more unneeded and unwanted gold—we are bound to cut down our exports to the same extent we cut down our imports. The result can only be to injure our farmers and manufacturers and to create internal disequilibrium. * * * If the Republicans as a body vote for the defeat of the Hull trade policy, if they demand a policy of embargo tariffs, they will be guilty not merely of bad economics but of bad politics. * * * (New York Times, January 12, 1940.)

This program is not popular with lobbyists. Back in the days of Smoot-Hawley and Fordney-McCumber and Payne-Aldrich, tariff making was almost the exclusive province of lobbyists skilled in applying pressure on Congressmen, masters of back scratching and logrolling. The Hull idea of having the trade experts of our Government get together with the trade experts of some other government and arrive at an agreement for the mutual benefit of both countries, is directly opposite to the lobbyist's idea of the way to do business. * * * These are things to bear in mind as the tariff fight swings into crescendo in Washington. It will help the rest of us to remain more or less calm if we remember that most of the commotion is supplied by lobbyists singing for their supper. (Washington News, January 11, 1940.)

Too often in the past, discussion of the tariff program of this Nation has descended to the level of waving a tinned Polish ham under the nose of the voters and shouting: "This is what the Government is doing to our farmers—giving their markets to other nations."

The most elementary cerebration should lead one to the conclusion that foreign trade is a matter of give and take. We cannot expect to have good customers abroad if we are not good customers, too. Attacks on the Hull program which are not well-founded in facts and figures may boomerang on their authors. * * * (McKeesport News, McKeesport, Pa., January 13, 1940.)

The chief "come on" slogan, to catch the farmer vote on behalf of sky-high tariff policies is going to be, as usual "the American Market for the American Farmer."

Of course the farmer is not expected to do any heavy thinking as to what this implies. He has been fooled by it before. He is expected to be a push-over for the siren song again. * * * Inevitably, such policies of exclusion for all foreign goods implies terrific penalization of those huge parts of our agriculture that produce surpluses for export. * * * In short carried to its inevitable conclusion, a real policy of the absolute complete American market for the American farmer means the ending of our farm exports. * * * And it means rapidly throwing huge parts of our farm production over into competition, in the domestic markets, with farmers who are not now surplus producers.

In short, the seductive slogan "the American Market for the American Farmer" leads straight to economic disaster for farmers as a whole, more than any other class.

"Penny wise and pound foolish" is the wise old phrase that fits the policy—like a glove—that our farmers are now asked to follow. (Des Moines Register (Independent), Des Moines, Iowa, January 10, 1940.)

Of all the fake political nostrums ever peddled the American farmer, the protective tariff is doubtless the phoniest.

After that last big war, the farm-the-farmer lobbyists and politicians sold the Fordney-McCumber tariff as the sure cure for all rural aches and pains. The result was that foreign countries which had been buying our cotton, wheat, corn, hogs, cattle, etc., started growing their own and buying elsewhere. * * * An effort was made to remedy that by lending more dollars abroad, which was a good racket while it lasted. * * * So the lobbyists and politicians started their medicine show again. Their new concoction bore the label of Smoot-Hawley, and was guaranteed to cure the tuberculosis, cancer, lumbago, and gout of the farm belt, and give American farmers a monopoly on the American market. It almost made good on that latter claim, but in so doing it knocked in the head the farmer's foreign markets, far more important to him than a domestic monopoly. Though by 1932 there was scarcely a trickle of farm imports, that act did little good for our farmers who got 5 cents for their cotton, 10 cents for corn, and "two bits" for wheat. * * *

Once again the farmers of farmers, who pitched their medicine tents in the lobbies of Washington, are crying out the old quack cure. They want to abolish the Hull reciprocal-trade treatment and persuade the patient to take a suck out of the same old protective tariff bottle. Is there a farmer in the audience who, having taken that "cure" twice, still has enough strength to step forward and give a testimonial? (The News (Independent), San Francisco, Calif., January 13, 1940.)

Opponents of the trade-agreement policy fall into several groups. The high-tariff advocates naturally object to it. Men who wish to embarrass the Roosevelt administration may think this is a good way to do so. Sticklers for precedent in tariff making perhaps see in this a subversive practice.

We have no sympathy with any of these groups. The plan of adjustment by executive agreement has proved its value, and should not now be dropped. (Cleveland Plain Dealer (Independent Democrat), Cleveland, Ohio, January 13, 1940.)

Much ado has been made about the imports of foodstuffs without explaining how much of the total has been made up of non-competitive food articles like bananas, coconuts, and coconut oil, or such as cattle from Canada and Mexico, which the cattle feeders want. Skillfully planting their men in these farmers' organizations and beating the tom-tom about food imports, the manufacturers of the country have been able to scare these farmers' groups into passing resolutions denouncing the trade pacts.

This scheme of using the farmer as a mark is an old one. The farmers, as a whole, are too little informed of how protection will aid them, and do not realize that a tariff on most farm products does them no good. * * *

The ignorance of the farmer on this matter has been used by the Republicans, representing the industrialists, to support every tariff protection bill since the time of the Civil War. And so it is now with the trade treaties. Although the opposition cannot point to a single instance where industry or agriculture has been damaged, and although it carefully neglects telling about any of the benefits, it conjures up the bogeyman of foreign competition to frighten the farmer as a means of helping the industrialist. The poor farmer does not realize that he has been competing with the bogeyman of foreign competition even when he was assured the all-time high Smoot-Hawley tariff was in effect. * * * (The Star (I), Tucson, Ariz., January 16, 1940.)

The Hawley-Smoot tariff helped wreck American foreign trade, including the export market. The agreements are showing impressive results in reviving foreign trade, including the export market. Yet the same crowd that hailed the destructive Hawley-Smoot tariff as a great achievement to bring America out of the depression is now fighting the trade agreements.

The question is whether the country shall turn back toward the Hawley-Smoot barriers, which were dictated by political considerations, or shall go forward on a competently worked out nonpolitical trade policy that has demonstrated its great value to American agriculture and industry. * * * (The Kansas City Times, Kansas City, Mo., January 12, 1940.)

When Governor Murphy of New Hampshire tells a House committee that the reciprocal trade agreement program "may imperil the very economic existence of our six (New England) States," he plainly is not dealing in known economic facts. Both New England and the Nation are more prosperous today than they were when the trade-agreements program was adopted. And one of the reasons for this better prosperity is the rise that has occurred in American exports since the program was put into effect. * * * (Providence Journal, January 24, 1940.)

It must have been something to listen to gentle slow-spoken Cordell Hull read his prepared statement on the reciprocal-trade agreements to the House Ways and Means Committee. * * *

Hull's worst enemies must admit it was an impressive performance. But while they are acknowledging this they had best look to their ammunition, for the facts that the mild-mannered Secretary of State marshaled in orderly review can't be laughed off; they can't be disregarded. If extension of the reciprocal-trade program were to be decided in a vacuum, on its merits alone without benefit of politics, it would not be too much to say that Hull all but won his case yesterday.

He did not stop with merely denouncing the "reckless claims" of "unscrupulous" critics. Any small-bore politician could have done that. Hull showed exactly why the claims are "reckless" and the critics "unscrupulous." With the accuracy of a hill-country squirrel shooter he ripped the dead center of the bull's-eye time after time. * * * (The Beacon-Journal (I. R.), Akron, Ohio, January 30, 1940.)

Unless the Congress can put forth some better means of promoting commerce it had best give careful attention to Secretary Hull's plea for continuance of the Reciprocal Trade Act.

Making of these treaties has seemed to a great many observers a work of far-reaching importance. The plan is not to be lightly discarded, unless there is something better to replace it. Thus far it would appear that no program more effective for encouraging international trade has been offered. * * * The separate treaties thus far consummated may not be ideals of perfection. But at least in some instances they are filling what otherwise might be virtually a vacuum. Whatever their faults or their lack, they are contributing to commerce. So doing, they are promoting friendships. Many wish that they might be extended to more nations, even to those now "blacklisted." They should fill a more valuable role when war is over, in helping bring world-wide economic stability. * * * (Baton Rouge Times, Baton Rouge, La.)

Where the adverse publicity to the reciprocal-trade treaties comes from originally, we do not know. It may be the work of antineutral dealers who wish to discredit the administration on any point possible. It may come from industrialists and Congressmen of the type who more than 50 years ago kidded the western farmer into thinking that tariffs were his savior, his benefactor, his God Almighty.

Before the North Dakota farmer goes off the "deep end," he should be warned that cancelation of reciprocal-trade treaties will hurt the farmer, not help him; will make him and his country economically poorer, not richer; will tend to make them both politically insecure. * * * There is no reason, however, for the farmer to believe that every farm product shipped into the United States competes with him. He should not develop a persecution complex on the trade-treaty question. Before the farmer starts another farm-suicide trend he might find out what's to his benefit, compared with what appears to be for his own good. (Bismarck Capitol, Bismarck, N. Dak., December 28, 1939.)

Republican leaders in Congress look upon the reciprocal trade agreements program as the major issue in the next session, according to an Associated Press dispatch. Minority Leader MARTIN of Massachusetts and 22 other New England Republican Members have prepared exhaustive reports showing how the program has worked against New England industry, farming, and fishing.

For more reasons than one, this is a dangerous subject for the Republicans to take under their wing in the coming session. A year ago, when the world was more or less at peace, it would have been safer ground. But now the issue of peace for the United States has become of pressing importance, and the administration has been given the opportunity of emphasizing more strongly than ever the function of a free reciprocal trade policy in the preservation of friendly international relations. * * * We do not think there is much to be said for high protective tariffs as an economic expedient. At the moment, there seems to be even less to be said for them as a political expedient. A tariff plank might woo a few farmers away from the minifluence of the New Deal, and it would probably gratify a good many industrialists who are, however, already prepared to vote Republican come what may. But given the sort of interpretation it is certain to receive from a democratic political organization that knows its business, the policy seems more likely to alienate large numbers of voters who will look at it as a sectional movement against the best interests of the Nation as a whole, and not calculated to promote the one thing we all hope for—peace. (The Herald (Independent), Rutland, Vt., December 28, 1939.)

There may be, and probably are, defects in the reciprocal-trade policy of the national administration, and certainly it is easy to find those who dislike it because it has resulted in some reduction of tariff barriers upon certain articles in which they are particularly interested. However, as it is a national policy intended to operate for the greatest good of the greatest number of our people, it seems fair to consider its effect on the Nation as a whole. * * * So on the face of the record the fact seems to be that, at least so far, the reciprocal-trade treaties certainly have not hurt us in the matter of favorable balance of foreign trade. We have sold abroad a surprisingly greater amount than we have bought from abroad, viewing the entire foreign-trade picture from the standpoint of the Nation as a whole, which is of course the proper view of a national policy. (The Press (Democratic), Sheridan, Wyo., January 5, 1939.)

Inasmuch as the trade-agreements controversy has taken on a dominantly partisan coloration, the President could hardly fail to defend this part of his program if only for political reasons. Insofar as attack is Republican in origin and partisan in motivation, it must be answered in like manner.

Beyond that, and far more important, is the fact that no administration—Republican or Democrat—could abandon such a promising contribution to the rebuilding of prosperity and peace without thereby confessing to a disregard for the national welfare.

The Hull program has been the target of many and varied shafts, but none has succeeded in finding a breach in the truth of these fundamental propositions: Artificial barriers to international trade destroy free markets and sources of supplies, hinder the exchange of surplus goods with its mutual benefits, and result in a universally lowered standard of living. Nations surrounded by such barriers tend to seek relief in forceful action. The negotiation of non-discriminatory reductions in trade barriers is the most practicable and the most promising method yet devised to promote the economic well-being of the United States and the peaceableness of other less fortunate nations. (The Dispatch (Independent), Minneapolis, Minn., January 5, 1940.)

The lesson in the relationship between external trade and internal prosperity which America has had since the imposition of the Hawley-Smoot tariff should have been enough to persuade labor of the fallacy of trying to raise the standard of living by cutting off imports of foreign-made goods, and of the necessity of reducing barriers to trade if prosperity is to be restored. * * * No imports means no exports; a curtailment of foreign market means ruin for large parts of the country and consequently a curtailed domestic market. The resulting lack of business means unemployment and low wages. (The Pioneer Press (Independent), St. Paul, Minn., December 18, 1939.)

The big point of distinction between the New Deal and this old principle of the Republican Party is that the New Deal does not content itself with giving protection to those who seek to have the Government protect their investments. The New Deal extends Government protection to labor and other groups. And if capital and profits are entitled to governmental protection, why should not labor and other groups get protection? The apparent justice of such an idea accounts for the strength of the New Deal. (The Star (Independent), Tucson, Ariz., November 23, 1939.)

"To separate foreign trade from politics." Shades of Willis Hawley and Reed Smoot. If ever politics sired a vampire to suck the life-blood out of our foreign trade the Hawley-Smoot tariff of 1930 was it. The Hull program, far from being bound up in politics, was designed to rid our foreign trade of the curse of politically logrolled tariff barriers behind which our commerce had languished. * * * Farmers will do well to regard skeptically the clever charges that the trade agreements have favored industry at their expense. * * * If he has a vivid recollection of the early 1930's—as what farmer has not?—surely he will hesitate before being sold that bill of shoddy goods again. (The Star Free Press (Independent), Ventura, Calif., November 27, 1939.)

The American people may well view with mingled emotions of regret and concern the political storm which is blowing up around the proposal to renew the reciprocal trade agreements program which will expire on June 12 unless legislation authorizing its continuance is enacted in the interim. In making a decision of this kind there is no place for partisan politics, no room for the manifestations of narrow sectionalism which have characterized some of our tariff policies in the past. It is a determination which calls for statesmanship of the highest order, and if the Congress fails to meet this requirement—if it does not look beyond the selfish arguments of special interest groups—it will have rendered a disservice to this country and to the world at large which will have evil consequences for many years to come. * * * The Hull program is not a panacea for all of the world's trade ills, and the obstacles confronting it are increased manifold in time of war, but the Star most earnestly hopes that the trade-agreement legislation will be renewed by this Congress. When peace comes it must be founded upon some such forward-looking program, and for the United States to abandon Secretary Hull's policies at this time would be an unthinkable backward step. (The Star (Independent), Washington, D. C., January 10, 1940.)

In the present critical period of international affairs no statesman has managed to combine a passionate devotion to principle and the calm moderation of logical thought with greater success than Secretary of State Cordell Hull. Mr. Hull detests as cordially as any man the use of "arbitrary force as the basis of international conduct." But, while nearly every other national spokesman, both in this country and abroad, has occasionally given way to prejudice or fear, Mr. Hull has remained magnificently aloof on his own high plane. (The Journal Every Evening, Wilmington, Del., May 23, 1939.)

Were we to return to the old principle that we can erect high tariff walls to keep foreign goods out of America while, at the same time, expecting other nations to admit freely our manufactured products, it would be a great mistake. If we expect other nations to admit our products, we must be willing, in return, to admit their products to this country. If the lessons of the past have taught anything, it is this, and a great many American manufacturers realize it fully. * * * America needs world markets. The prosperity of business, industry, and labor depends upon our ability to sell our goods abroad. We cannot hope to retain such world markets, however, if we are unwilling to permit the entrance of foreign goods into this country and any argument to the contrary cannot stand. The Republican Party should not as a pure matter of political expediency take a position which it will find later is neither logical nor wise. (The Times (I. R.) Watertown, N. Y., January 8, 1940.)

As for this drive in Congress, it is backed by interests which feel that they have been definitely injured by the lowering of certain tariff rates in the reciprocal treaties now in operation, and by other interests which fear that they will be damaged by future treaties. * * * Whatever faults may be disclosed in Secretary Hull's practical handiwork, he is right in principle when he holds that increased trade is essential to the advancement of peace. (The Gazette (I. R.), Worcester, Mass., January 8, 1940.)

The board of commerce has taken a well-advised action. If tariffs are not to be thrown back to the mercies of the dicker-and-trade system in Congress, it is essential that the defense of the reciprocal system have expression on a scale and with determination meeting the vigor and intensity characterizing the concerted drive being made to do away with the trade bargains. (The News (I.), Detroit, Mich., January 23, 1940.)

The authority on which Secretary of State Hull and his aides have been acting is about to end and Congress is making up its mind whether to renew it.

The trouble is that this very important economic policy is being attacked in an atmosphere of partisan politics which results in exaggerated statements. It would be more convincing if those who talk or write about this matter would get down—painful as it is—to a study of facts. (Times-Star (Independent), Bridgeport, Conn., January 25, 1940.)

Mr. Hull's commendable work has never been more essential than today amid clashing and narrow nationalisms which have already precipitated one war and may lead to others. There are many ways of bringing about a friendly and cooperative world, and to trade for mutual benefit is certainly one of them. This is no time to abandon it. (Boston Evening Transcript, December 9, 1939.)

Even high-tariff Republicans admit that Mr. Hull's trade treaties have removed from Congress some of the worst aspects of log-rolling. If you pinned them down they would admit that congressional vote swapping is expensive for the country and raises the devil with wise national policy. * * * (Berkshire Eagle (I.), Pittsfield, Mass., December 29, 1939.)

Let this be a warning: Destroy reciprocal-trade agreements and you cast this Nation out of the role that history seems to have ordained for us in fashioning a world where free men can trade with their neighbors and through this trade give sustenance to the roots of peace. (The Evening Bulletin (Independent), Providence, R. I., January 11, 1940.)

Today agriculture, to live, must sell its surplus abroad. To do that it must exchange raw products for finished goods and other raw products. American industry, for the most part, is strong enough to compete with that of other nations. In those few instances where it is not, it should be protected.

But if we are to achieve a balanced economy, we must have a freer exchange of goods. Tariff dams will have to be destroyed. The water of commerce will have to flow in a steady stream for all to enjoy. You are going to hear a great deal shortly about "protection for our American industries," and most of it will be sheer, unadulterated bunk, put out by selfish persons for their own profit. * * * (The Star-Tribune, Providence, R. I.)

The belief that the domestic farmer is being driven out of the domestic market by imported foreign products, therefore, appears to be without substantial foundation. The problem of the farmer, indeed, has quite different roots. As Mr. Hull points out, the United States normally produces not merely enough to satisfy domestic needs but a great surplus besides, which, if it is not sold abroad, means disastrously low domestic prices, with consequent agricultural distress. And the only way in which the agricultural surpluses can be sold abroad is to make arrangements with other nations whereby they can sell more of their products in the United States in exchange for wheat, cotton, and lard. Indeed, the administration has endeavored so diligently to find outlets for surplus agricultural products that the workers of the East have sometimes been led to complain that they, not the farmer, are being "sold down the river."

The fact is that neither the farmers nor the workers of the United States are being sold out by a policy whose chief purpose is to facilitate the production and exchange of goods. For every item sold by a foreign producer in the United States, the United States sells another item abroad. * * * The realization that closed markets and restricted production, whether on a national scale or an international, means not increased prosperity but only shared poverty for everyone, whether he be a domestic producer or a foreign, whether he be a farmer or a worker, may be hard to learn; but it must be learned if the world, and the United States included, is to resume its progress toward economic democracy. * * * (The Courant (Republican), Hartford, Conn., August 2, 1939.)

The proposed attack on the Reciprocal Tariff Act brings dismaying evidence that some in the Republican Party are still living in the past century. * * * (The Courant (Republican), Hartford, Conn., August 27, 1937.)

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina has consumed 1 hour and 12 minutes.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, at the close of the tariff debate in 1930 a member of the majority of the committee at that time made the following statement concerning the Hawley-Smoot bill, and I inject it at this part of the discussion because reference has been made to it on several occasions and I want it to appear in the RECORD as a correct quotation. The paragraph reads as follows:

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, once this bill becomes a law confidence will be immediately restored, we shall gradually work out of the temporary slump we have been in for the last few months and once more prosperity will reign supreme, foreign reprisals will vanish into thin air, and we shall continue to raise the standard of American labor and American wages. We shall dissipate the dark clouds of your gloomy prophecy with the sunshine of a continuing prosperity.

The prophet stands before you, discredited to some extent by the sequence of unfortunate world events that followed the passage of that bill. I might rightfully trespass on your time and your patience in order to establish a long list of alibis, but I shall not do that. I shall refrain, and comfort myself with the knowledge that at least I thought I was right. Being right, of course, does not always bring its own reward. I am reminded of an epitaph on a man's tombstone who had been killed in an automobile accident. The epitaph ran something like this:

Here lies the body of Jonathan Hay
Who died disputing the right of way.
He said he was right, that's the same old song,
But he's just as dead as if he'd been wrong.

[Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I have heard a good deal of discussion here today about tariff bills and tariff policies and I hope a little later on to have something to say about the way my friends on this side of the House handled tariff bills some few years ago. Do you know that only 6 Members of this Seventy-sixth Congress were Members of the House when the Underwood-Simmons bill was written and became the law? There are only 28 Members of the present Congress who were here when the Fordney-McCumber bill was enacted into law. There are less than 100, or considerably less than 25 percent of the present membership of the House, who were here when the Hawley-Smoot bill became law. Such are the ravages of time, political hysteria, and of death. Thus the matter of tariff discussion, pro and con, to the other 332 Members of the House is largely a matter of tradition.

During the debates on the 1913 bill the free-trade policy had many staunch supporters in this Congress, but as good judgment displaced prejudice during the lapse of years, by the time the Fordney-McCumber bill was presented our friends on the Democratic side had thrown up a breastwork defense which they labeled "tariff for revenue only." There were scarcely a half dozen who still clung to the outmoded fetish of free trade. That showed a remarkable advance in constructive thinking. The tariff has been a burning issue over a long period of years, and not very much that is new has been uttered in defense of or against its merits. The two closing speeches on the Wilson bill in 1893, one by the Honorable Thomas Brackett Reed and the other by the then Speaker of the House, Mr. Crisp, have always seemed to me to be the most complete in their analysis and conclusions.

It is interesting at this time to note that when the Wilson bill was found to be incapable of producing the revenue necessary even at that time, an amendment was added providing for our first income tax, calculated to provide $75,000,000 in revenue, which the tariff did not provide. That amendment was adopted and became part of the law, but was held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. It is interesting to remember that at that time the returns from the customhouse practically paid the expenses of running the Federal Government. To the new dealer who thinks only in billions, customhouse revenues are mere "chicken feed."

It appears from the speeches and the remarks that were made during the hearings that my friends, the Democrats, have at last found a tariff policy that apparently meets with their approval. They have been a long time arriving at this conclusion. In 1912 the Democratic Party reiterated a previous charge they had made that the laying of tariff duties except for the purpose of revenue was unconstitutional. In 1916 they advocated a tariff for revenue only; in 1920 a tariff for revenue. They omitted the "only." In 1924 they advocated a competitive tariff, and in 1928, according to the famous Raskob telegram, Democratic congressional candidates were all "in the bag" for a protective tariff, and business had nothing to fear if Al Smith was elected. In 1932 they demanded the repeal of the Hawley-Smoot Act, and they romped and ranted up and down the hustings vociferously berating this law and promising to deal it a death blow when they were placed in power.

Seven years, seven long years, have taken wing and the Hawley-Smoot Act is still on the statute books, somewhat battered and bruised, but still in the ring. In view of subsequent developments along trade-treaty lines, what a material advantage they had in having the Hawley-Smoot rates to use for trading purposes. The rates in the Underwood-Simmons bill would have provided no opportunity to trade.

Now, reckless statements are constantly made about how much the ultimate consumer has to pay when we have a protective tariff. I remember one witness appearing before us this year who appeared in 1929. He appeared for an industry that has been harder pressed to hold 50 percent of its business in this country than any other industry in the United States. I refer to the pottery industry. In answer to the reckless statements as to what additional burden some of the rates would place upon consumers, I am going to quote from the evidence of Mr. Wells. This is a short paragraph appearing on page 1276 of the hearings in 1929. He made the following statement:

Our prices today are much lower than they were in 1922. When the Fordney-McCumber bill was passed prophecies were made by the friends of importers on the floor of the Senate that the addition of a small ad valorem duty would increase the price to the housewives of this country by $12,000,000 in their annual purchases. The actual fact is that they are buying American and foreign dishes today, in 1929, for 25 percent less than they bought them in 1922.

No substantial evidence has been offered at any time that the Hawley-Smoot Act caused a rise in prices. In those days and even now I sometimes feel that placing the tariff policy in the hands of the Democratic Party is a good deal like placing an osteopath in charge of an allopathic hospital because he gave his own children castor oil. It is just about as appropriate.

I notice my very dear friend, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, made some reference to the terrifically bad treatment the Democrats received when the Hawley-Smoot bill was being considered. He said they were not allowed to offer amendments and were not allowed to consider the measure. All tariff bills have been written in executive session by the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee, irrespective of which party was writing the tariff bill, and they have all been considered very largely under what might be considered by some as a gag rule because you never could get through with it any other way. I want particularly to call your attention to a report I have here, taken from the New York Times in 1913, when the Underwood-Simmons bill was under consideration in the House, just to indicate their liberality and also the method used by my Democratic friends at that time. I desire to do this because in 1930 Mr. GARNER, the distinguished Vice President of the United States, then a Member of the House, said to the Republicans, when the Hawley-Smoot bill was about to be considered:

I solicit of you at least honesty in the consideration of it. You should consider it according to the rules of the House and not put it on its passage without full and free discussion.

Let us see what happened when the Underwood-Simmons bill was being considered.

APRIL 9, 1913.

The Democrats this day began consideration of the tariff bill behind closed doors in a party caucus, proceeding under the 5-minute rule. Schedules A and B, chemicals, etc., were taken up. All proposed amendments to the committee bill were defeated.

The press report states that President Wilson revisited the Capitol—evidently he had been there before—for the purpose of conferring with Members on the proposed bill. The following is an excerpt from the article as it appeared in the New York Times:

Some of the amendments under consideration by the President and his Cabinet, as well as in the House and Senate, involved correction of obvious oversights on the part of the majority of the Ways and Means Committee. One of these was the leaving of mohair with a duty of 20 percent while raw wool was put on the free list.

Mohair is the coat of the Angora goat, raised extensively in Texas. The 20 percent on mohair remained in the bill in spite of the President's visit to the Capitol, but a duty on wool was denied although offered in the committee. Representative Dies, the father of our distinguished Representative DRES, sought a duty of 15 percent ad valorem, but the sheep's wool was not to be considered, nothing but the mohair of the goat, and the wool duty was not allowed.

So every schedule was considered in Democratic caucus. The votes are here given. It was one of those caucuses that must have leaked. The vote is given on all these propositions. The cotton schedule was completed, it being adopted without change. A proposal to increase the rate on collars was defeated 96 to 27.

Then on April 18 other standing committee amendments were adopted and in accordance with an understanding of the previous day and in response to pressure from various sources, the committee agreed to rescind their action in the matter of placing a duty of 50 cents a pound on vanilla beans.

That sounds a little bit like logrolling, does it not? "Pressure from outside sources." Discussion on the wool schedule was continued. Representative Bathwick, of Ohio, offered an amendment to put ready-made clothing on the free list. The vote was 99 against and 68 in favor of the motion.

That is sufficient to show you that very little attention should be paid to the criticism leveled at us by our distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and others with regard to the unfair treatment accorded them.

Mr. BOEHNE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BOEHNE. When the Underwood bill was written in 1913 in 1914 did we not have a pattern to go by; namely, the Payne-Aldrich bill of 1908 or 1909?

Mr. CROWTHER. I am not discussing the pattern of your bill.

Mr. BOEHNE. I was speaking of the pattern of drawing up the bill.

Mr. CROWTHER. You can go farther back than that. You can go back to the old Wilson-Gorman bill and the Dingley bill, where you would find similar patterns.

Mr. BOEHNE. The Payne-Aldrich bill was fresh in the minds of both parties in 1913.

Mr. CROWTHER. I do not think the query is particularly relevant. I simply desire to show the uniformity of procedure by both political parties. To sum up, the Underwood-Simmons bill was written by the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee and was considered for amendment first in a Democratic caucus under the 5-minute rule. I do not remember that we ever followed that procedure on our side of the House.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman might not remember that the Republicans ever considered any such matters in caucus, but the gentleman certainly will remember that when his party was in power they adopted the tactics, as did the Democrats, of writing their own revenue bills and tariff bills at all times.

Mr. CROWTHER. I so stated a moment ago.

Mr. COCHRAN. This occurred not only on this side of the Capitol but on the other side, because at one time I happened to be secretary to a Senator who was on the Senate Finance Committee, and that was the policy over there as it was here.

Mr. CROWTHER. May I again state to the gentleman from Missouri that I have already testified to that effect?

Of course, the word was passed around that the Republicans had about as much chance of getting an amendment of any kind adopted as the proverbial snowball had of maintaining its integrity in the torrid temperature of hades. But enough of that. I believe the criticism will probably cease in the future with regard to the method of handling tariff bills. Let us get a little closer to the subject at hand, because, as I say, a good deal of water has gone over the dam since the Democrats declared the policy of tariff-raising for anything except revenue unconstitutional. Woodrow Wilson held that view in one of his books, but he afterward withdrew his former statement on that subject.

There has been some criticism about my inconsistency in even prophesying that there would be a period of prosperity following the Hawley-Smoot Act. I just want to call attention to one or two more inconsistencies that developed on the other side of the House. When we had the flexible clause in the 1930 bill, and it was also in the 1922 bill, it was singled out by several Members of the House as their particular grievance against the bill. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], now the Vice President, and several others used that for their text. They did not say much about rates at that time but they did inveigh against the policy of the flexible tariff.

Comparing the flexible-tariff provision of 1922 and of 1930 with the reciprocal-trade-treaty program is about like comparing chickenpox with smallpox. It is certainly a tremendously milder proposition than the trade-treaty program.

Many even on the Democratic side feel that the State Department went clear beyond the intent of Congress in changing the excise taxes, particularly on oil. But mild as the flexible clause was, it was the subject of most vociferous and vitriolic criticism both here and in the body at the other end of this building. A round robin was signed by the members of the Finance Committee at the other end of the Capitol inveighing against the adoption of this policy. My distinguished chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], in a speech at that time, when the 1930 act was under consideration, had this to say about tariff making by the Executive, and remember that is what we have now—tariff making by the Executive. Let me read what the gentleman from North Carolina had to say at that time:

The administrative features are subversive of our system, idea, and ideals of government; and if enacted into law will be a violation of the fundamental principles upon which it rests.

The fathers who framed the Constitution, wisely, in my opinion, left to Congress the initiating and enacting of laws raising revenue. The flexible provision giving the President the power to raise or lower tariff rates to the amount of 50 percent renders nugatory in spirit and practical effect this provision of the Constitution.

In my opinion—

This is Chairman Doughton speaking—

we have gone a long way too far already, in the centralization of power in the Executive head of the Government.

Mr. Chairman, what a distance we have come since then! Centralization of power, once anathema to the Democratic Party, has now been adopted as their slogan.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That statement was made before we had suffered the effects of the death sentence of the Smoot-Hawley bill. We were dealing then with natural and normal conditions, but we are dealing now with desperate emergency conditions brought about by the Smoot-Hawley tariff.

Mr. CROWTHER. We have heard that word "emergency" for 7 long years. I may say to my good chairman that for 2 years under the Hawley-Smoot bill we had an improvement of 16 percent per year in our foreign trade.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman please put in the Record what President Hoover said about prosperity being just around the corner?

Mr. CROWTHER. I do not believe the gentleman will insist on my putting anything of that kind in my remarks. May I suggest to him that there is a lurking suspicion that real prosperity is still around the corner and 10,000,000 unemployed will so testify.

I again read from my distinguished chairman's speech.

If this bill is enacted into law he will have the power of life and death over industry, all manufacturing enterprises, a complete autocratic power affecting agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, there is a word picture of warning as to what might happen. My chairman has vision. He has almost qualified as a clairvoyant. [Laughter.]

Again I quote:

My friends, this is too dangerous and alarming to contemplate. With all this power vested in the President of the United States he becomes a colossus. It is too much power and authority to lodge in any man who ever has been, is now, or ever will be President of the United States. In fact, with all this unrestricted and unlimited power he would be in a better position to overthrow our form of government and proclaim himself king than was the first consul of France, the great Napoleon, when he overthrew the French Government and proclaimed himself emperor.

It seems that the more power men are given the more they are obsessed with a morbid gluttony for increased power. My friends, it is time to pause and call a halt; to stop, think, look, and listen before we go over the yawning precipice just ahead of us.

Then our very distinguished Secretary of State, the Honorable Cordell Hull, with whom it was my pleasure to serve for many years on the Ways and Means Committee, and whose views regarding a protective tariff I was familiar with at all times, because when he was on the committee you could get a very decisive yes or no from him on almost any question of importance, but when he appeared before our committee in behalf of the trade treaties I noticed he had adopted the language and the manner of the diplomat, and you could never get him to say yes or no. It was always a continual reiteration of a previous statement and saying, "I think I answered that before." This reminded me of a chap who once said to me that everybody in the Diplomatic Service ought to learn to speak Spanish, because you could talk more in Spanish without saying anything than any other language in the world. [Laughter.]

Now, Secretary Hull at the time the Hawley-Smoot bill was passed was a Member of the Senate of the United States, and he was likewise terrifically disturbed about this flexible clause and this power that was going to be given to the President, and he said in the Senate:

It is clearly unsound, unwise, impracticable, subversive of the plain functions of Congress, and should be speedily repealed.

He also said this:

The proposed enlargement and broad expansion of the provisions and functions of the flexible tariff clause is astounding. It is undoubtedly unconstitutional and is violative of the functions of the American Congress. Not since the countries wrenched from an English king the power and authority to control taxation has there been a transfer of the taxing power back to the head of the Government on a basis so broad and so unlimited as is proposed in this pending bill. As has been said on former occasions, this is too much power for a bad man to have or for a good man to want.

I have often wondered just where this new policy of reciprocal-trade treaties came from. Of course, to my mind, it has always been a plain, straightforward—well, I would not say straightforward hardly; I would like to modify that—it has been a cleverly designed method of gradually reducing the rates of the Hawley-Smoot bill, coupled with a suggestion as to the maintenance of peace and courting the friendliness of the world. Of course, that is about all they could do, as they did not have the intestinal stamina to repeal the Hawley-Smoot bill. They would not have dared to go to the country with the policy that is developing under this plan.

They would not have dared to go to the country in 1936 with a declaration that they were going to reduce 42 percent of the items in the tariff bill 39.2 percent flat average right along the line. They would not have dared to do that, but they concluded they could do it by this inside, gnawing, method under the trade-treaty program, and do you know where they got that idea from? I will tell you. I found it in an old volume, dated 1911, 29 years ago.

They were considering the Canadian reciprocity treaty at that time and John Dalzell, of Pennsylvania, made the minority report, and he had found in a magazine an article from which he quoted at that time, just a few lines, "In a magazine article published a few years ago, Mr. Williams, of Mississippi, now a Senator-elect from that State"—you see, in 1911, when the minority report was written on the Canadian treaty, he was Senator-elect from Mississippi, and he had written this article criticizing the tariff, and he issued this advice, and this is significant, happening so many years ago:

There is also a tariff revision by piecemeal. This is the tariff revision by reciprocal-trade agreements with other nations. Much can be done along this piecemeal line of tariff revision under a Democratic or an approximately Democratic law.

Evidently that is where it all commenced because never during any discussion that I ever heard of the tariff in the 22 years of my service, did I ever hear anybody offer any suggestion that we adopt a reciprocal-trade program as a substitute for a tariff bill, neither when the Democrats were discussing a bill or when the Republicans were discussing a bill.

Mr. Chairman, any nation is justified in establishing import duties high enough to protect its standard of living against low-wage-paying countries. Under present conditions our protection is totally inadequate. Because of this unique position of our country we cannot expect any increase in percentage of imports without untold harm to our employment situation. We can look forward, however, to an increase in dollar value of our foreign trade, but this increase will depend wholly upon our increase in domestic prosperity. Every economist and everybody who is not an economist knows, as well as everyone who is well versed in the mechanics of foreign trade, that expansion of our exports can only be obtained by a great increase in production of our goods and services for domestic purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes. Our present foreign-trade policy, which brings about an increasing flow of competitive foreign products, both manufactured and farm products, does not create a proportionate increase of production of domestic goods but results in the curtailment of domestic production, and in industrial and farm-labor unemployment. No international drum-beating, conferring, and trading can start our industries in full motion and raise the country from the depths of depression.

Trade-treaty proponents have contended all along that any abandonment of the present trade-treaty program would mean going back to "isolationism" and "embargo tariffs." The answer is that it would mean nothing of the kind. We never had a policy of embargo tariffs before the program was inaugurated, and I know of no one who seriously suggests such a policy.

The Republican tariff policy does not seek and does not result in, the exclusion of foreign goods. The most that it does is simply to equalize competitive conditions in the home market as between domestic producers and low-cost foreign producers so that the foreign producer will not come into our market with any undue advantage over our own producers.

Years ago we had in our platform a provision that in addition to that, there should be a fair profit for the American producer, but we yielded that, and all that we asked during the consideration of the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act was given to us by the same authorities and the same experts that supplied the evidence at the present time, and the only evidence that was given us by them and by the manufacturers was their submitted list of production costs here and in a foreign country. In case a particular duty is too high, provision is made under the so-called flexible tariff for its reduction. But they say that the flexible tariff was not used. The fact that it was not used was a tribute to its efficacy. The opportunity was there for domestic manufacturers and importers to question the appraisement and the rates. All they had to do was to apply for a Tariff Commission investigation. A House Member could offer a resolution, a Senate Member could offer a resolution for that purpose, and because it was not used they said it was not effective.

That is not so. To my mind the fact that it was not used very often, or that there were not many cases litigated under that clause, is in a sense a tribute to the fairly good judgment of the committee that wrote the bill. You remember that in the tax bill we had section 220. It was calculated to put a heavy penalty on those who did not make proper distribution of their profits, and it was argued that because section 220 had brought in so little money it was not efficacious, it was weak. In my estimation the very fact that it brought in so little money was that that 220 was a warning to big business and corporations, and resulted in very few cases developing that had to be litigated in the tax courts of the Government.

Even if the present trade treaties were entirely wiped out and the rates of the Hawley-Smoot Act were restored, this would by no means result in any embargoes.

In both the Hawley-Smoot Act and the previous Republican tariff measure, two-thirds of our imports came in free of duty. If any evidence is needed of the fact that the rates imposed under the 1930 tariff have not shut out imports, it is found in the official statistics of the Department of Commerce showing large increases of imports of items on the dutiable list, even excluding those on which concessions have been made under trade treaties.

The Hull trade agreements have made radical and sweeping tariff reductions which donate to 64 countries special advantages in the American market.

Duties have been reduced on more than one-third of all commodities produced by American farmers and industrial workers.

When the producers of other countries are transferred from war and war industry to peacetime production, this open door to the American market will spell disaster to this country.

Eighty million men are engaged in war and war industry in foreign countries, according to Secretary Hull. They are not producing great surpluses of peacetime goods, although American farmers and workers are already feeling the injury of competition by foreigners in this market. Imports are rapidly increasing.

The 80,000,000 men now engaged in war and war work will find it easy to compete with Americans. Foreign wages are lower. Few countries protect their workers by wage-hour laws, social security, workmen's compensation, unemployment compensation and other requirements that add to American production costs.

I do not know whether it is a new deal or not. As I look back at that tariff recommendation of the Honorable John Sharp Williams, and realizing that our distinguished Secretary of State belonged also to that same school of thought, it looks to me like an old deal with New Deal Santa Claus whiskers, and a full pack of gifts for our so-called good neighbors.

If the present system of trade agreements is continued it means good-bye to American control of the American market, upon which 95 percent of the country's business depends.

By transferring its tariff-making power to New Deal bureaucrats, Congress has made itself powerless to avert the disaster that is threatened. The tariff reductions under trade agreements tie the hands of Congress so long as these agreements remain in effect.

Not only are duties reduced on 1,063 competitive commodities, but pledges have been given that many articles on the free list shall not be made dutiable.

Experience warns us that the threat to American farmers and industrial workers is not an idle one. We can judge of what is to come by our experience after the World War.

Not less than 30,000,000 soldiers and war workers were turned back to peacetime production. At that time the United States had a low tariff. The war had acted as a barrier to the influx of goods into this country, just as the present war is holding back the ruinous competition that is in sight.

When the World War ended there was furious activity in foreign countries. Workers toiled 12 and 14 hours a day at poverty wages to restore the goods and wealth that had been consumed.

The surplus began to pour into the United States. Democratic low-tariff policy had opened the door.

In 1922 the Republican Party enacted the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act and again set up a Maginot line of economic defense for American farmers and American workers.

This country's market was saved for Americans. There followed 8 years of the greatest prosperity our country has ever known.

This was only 18 years ago. Yet the plain lesson of that experience means nothing to New Deal tariff theorists. Through bureaucratic trade agreements negotiated in secret they have traded away the substance of our American market for the shadow of foreign concessions.

We were unable to find out just who did sit in in the making of these trade agreements. We had a list published of Britishers that came here, but I have never been able to find out who they were; whether they were members of a British trade association, whether any of them were manufacturers, or to what organization they did belong; but it is significant that no American representatives of trade were permitted to sit in during the making of the agreements.

The concessions granted by foreign countries open only 22 markets on better terms to Americans. Other markets are mostly in minor unimportant trading countries. But the concessions in our markets are given away not only to the 22 trade-agreement countries but to all favored nations, numbering 64.

So the Hull agreements throw open our market to the whole world.

We are asked to extend this insane program for 3 years more, so that additional agreements may be made to tear away still more of our protection to American farmers and industrial workers.

This program is, in effect, a plan to merge all the world's markets into one pool. High-standard, high-wage countries are to come down to a lower level of living and wages, on the theory that half-starved millions of peasants and toilers in backward countries will get more. Then, according to this theory, the world will be happy and remain at peace.

It is a plan to create a vast pool of world poverty, into which the welfare of Americans will be thrown. Their market is to be shared by the low-wage workers of all lands.

This plan is a blow at the wage-hour law, the social-security program, and all other laws that have been enacted to benefit American workers and farmers. American wages must sink down to the world level.

I am not willing to subject our national welfare to the vagaries of theorists who think that world peace can be maintained by pooling the world's markets and the world's wages. I want the American market saved for Americans. I want Americans to receive high wages. I want farmers to receive their full share of income.

By holding our own market for ourselves we can face the world in safety. With that immense resource at our command we can go out and get our share of world trade. Without it, our foreign trade would be nothing. When we give away our market we give away the wages of our workers and the living of our farmers.

Congress should resume its power to control tariffs. It must act before the deluge comes. Will Rogers was eternally right when he said that "We never lost a war and never won a conference." [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

During the course of this debate the membership of the House is going to hear much about the iniquities of the Hawley-Smoot law. Our political and economic ills will be laid at its door. So will the wars being fought in Europe and Asia be charged to it, and we need not be surprised if the droughts of 1934-35 were due to that measure. However, we will not be told why the new dealers have been afraid to repeal it after 7 long years.

PRESSURE AND LOGROLLING

I cannot recall in the nearly quarter of a century of my service here when there has been so much pressure and logrolling as there has been in connection with this legislation. They even brought our Ambassador to Belgium back to act as liaison officer between the White House, the State Department, and the Congress. Evidently he was not on the job the other day. I hold in my hand a clipping from West Palm Beach, Fla., dated February 17. It reads:

PERHAPS SECRETARY HULL WISHES MR. DAVIES REALLY WAS MAGICIAN

PALM BEACH, FLA., February 17.—This swanky winter resort was chuckling today over an episode in which the fancy clothes of Joseph E. Davies, special adviser in the Department of State and former American Ambassador to Russia and Belgium, almost cost him his seat at the speakers' table at a Democratic rally.

So you have started to rally? Well, it is high time. [Laughter.] Reading on—

Davies arrived at the dinner last night in a top hat and silk-lined opera cape.

Attendants at the door, after one peek at the silk skimmer and cape, mistook Davies for a magician slated to appear later, and were trying to shunt him off to the stage door when someone recognized Secretary of State Hull's new man Friday.

Undoubtedly, the gathering was looking for a magician who could pull another white rabbit out of the hat.

At the outset be it understood that those who oppose the joint resolution to extend the so-called Reciprocal Trade Act for another 3 years do so because it is not reciprocity.

In their zeal to cultivate international goodwill the new dealers have given away the cream of the American market, especially as it affects agriculture. We protest against the manner in which the law has been and is being administered. It savors of bureaucracy in its most vicious form. Those actually charged with writing the trade treaties work behind closed doors; their identity is unknown to those whose fortunes and future rest in their hands. From their handiwork there is no appeal. They are judge and jury. Incidentally, they are free-traders who believe that the more we buy from other nations the more friendly will those countries feel toward us, thus correspondingly lessening the chances for war.

We object to the policy now in effect which gives to all countries, save Germany and Australia, all the benefits that we give to the country with which we enter into an agreement, even though such countries give us no concessions in return. This is done under the so-called favored-nation clause. Russia and Japan have benefited greatly under this strange and indefensible arrangement. Our colleague from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] has explained the way it works in an understandable manner. I shall at this point use his illustration: "If two neighbors trade horses, the one who is in the same fix as is Uncle Sam will have to give a horse gratis to each of his other neighbors." Such an arrangement is unsound and dangerous. Likewise, it is indefensible.

All trade agreements should be upon a barter basis. We have an agreement with Brazil. Last year the Brazilians bought from us commodities valued at $80,000,000, while in turn we bought $107,000,000 from her. Why should not Brazil be required to buy as much from us as we buy from her? No, they tell us that would not be neighborly. Maybe not, but it would be smart business. It will be recalled that George N. Peek, as good a friend as the American farmer has ever had, broke with the New Deal because of their refusal to view foreign trade in a practical manner. Mr. Peek contends that nearly all the treaties made to date have been made at the expense of the American farmer. The testimony of Louis J. Taber, master of the National Grange; F. E. Mollin, secretary, American National Live Stock Association; Charles W. Holman, National Cooperative Milk Producers Federation; J. H. Connaughton, National Association of Hot House Vegetable Growers; Dr. John Lee Coulter, a recognized economist against whom the new dealers brought their heaviest artillery without avail—one and all were of one mind. The reciprocal-trade policy of this administration had injured American agriculture. On the other hand, we had before us a number of witnesses, representing the automotive, office equipment, and other industries, in support of the program. I might at this point also call attention to the several representatives of women's organizations who spoke in support of the pending measure. Naturally so, for they represent the consuming elements of our people and probably can see no injustice in making the American farmer furnish their tables with food at below cost of production. Some apparently overlook the fact there can be no recovery in the towns and cities until agriculture has been rehabilitated.

Mr. Chairman, this is a practical matter, and each side views the subject in a practical manner. For instance, some 12 or 15 Members of the Houses appeared before us in the closing days of the hearings. One Member from Oklahoma, who came before us in support of the resolution, assured the committee that so far as agriculture and the livestock industry is concerned his people have no complaint. I was not in the least surprised to learn a few days later that this particular Member had but a few weeks previously bought nearly 1,500 head of large steers in Mexico for his ranch in Oklahoma. It is easy to understand why this gentleman is strongly in favor of keeping the bars down on cattle coming in from Canada and Mexico. Indeed, it would be strange if he took any other position, but we know that those who actually raise cattle for the market do not share his views nor approve the position he takes. Incidentally, this gentleman did protest the reduction of 50 percent in the excise tax on imported oil, so we may assume there are a few oil wells and few cattle in the gentleman's district.

Then there were several Members of Congress from Texas who came to plead that the excise tax on oil be restored. Like their colleague from Oklahoma, they were strong for the New Deal trade program, providing it did not do anything to their districts. Regardless of whether the oil tax is restored, these gentlemen and a hundred or more similarly situated will vote to extend the law for another 3 years because they know that the President yet has about 5,000 fat Government jobs to give out and friends must be taken care of no matter at whose cost. To them the tariff is a local issue and "pork" is money spent for public improvements in some other Member's district.

The hearings disclosed some very interesting incidents. For instance, it was brought out that during the hearings on the Argentina agreement, in which it was proposed to make a substantial cut in the import duty on turkeys, one member of the Ways and the Means Committee, and a strong and lusty supporter of the Roosevelt-Hull free-trade policy, hot-footed it down to the State Department to protest that turkeys must not be touched. In checking up on the imports of turkeys, I find that they are less than one one-hundredth of 1 percent, yet that member throughout the hearings sought to console witnesses appearing in opposition that where imports are less than 10 percent they have nothing to fear.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. BUCK. The Mexican cattle, however, paid full duty, did they not?

Mr. KNUTSON. I think not.

Mr. BUCK. Are you sure they came in without payment of duty?

Mr. KNUTSON. They paid the lowered rate. I cannot conceive of the gentleman going to Mexico to buy cattle when he can buy them here unless he could buy them cheaper. Of course, he gets more horns down there. [Laughter.]

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to my friend.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mexican currency has depreciated 41 percent. Consequently the American dollar will buy 41 percent more than theirs, even though we do not have a lower duty.

Mr. KNUTSON. I thank my colleague from Minnesota, who is an outstanding authority on finance. I had overlooked that point.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. GORE. Is there a trade agreement with Mexico?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mexico does not need to enter into a trade agreement with us. She gets the cream without giving us anything in return. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think the gentleman is well aware of the fact that there is not a single man in this House, or a married man either, for that matter, who speaks for the southwestern cattle and mohair industries who will stand here and defend this program in the name of those growers of cattle and mohair.

Mr. KNUTSON. I think the gentleman is right. Certainly no one in possession of his senses will do so.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I make this statement now to give the Texas delegation, or any Member who represents that part of the State, a chance to defend the program.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am coming to the Texas delegation a little later.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. SOUTH. It is a fact, however, that cattle are bringing a substantially higher price today than they did in 1932 or 1933 or for several years before?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes; I will agree to that, but that is because world conditions have changed since that time.

Mr. SOUTH. It is further a fact, is it not—

Mr. KNUTSON. I want to go back to my friend from Oklahoma now. I will get to Texas in a few minutes.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there for a moment?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Is it not a fact also that we have 8,000,000 less cattle than we had in 1934?

Mr. KNUTSON. It was so testified to before the committee.

How different the attitude of the Florida delegation. The agreement with Cuba has greatly injured the early vegetable grower in that and other Southern States. He is being put out of business by peon labor in Cuba whose only wearing apparel is a breechclout and a tattered straw hat. I take off my hat to the Florida delegation. They opposed and voted against the original Reciprocal Trade Act and have consistently opposed it ever since. They know what it has done and is doing to their people. Let me suggest that the Members read the able statement of Representative PAR CANNON on the subject of early vegetables, to be found on page 2619 of the printed hearings. It is entirely free from that narrow local view so often found.

In passing let me say that service on the Ways and Means Committee is a course in human psychology such as can be had in no college or school. It brings out in burning letters human provincialism and selfishness, ambition, and avarice. What I say does not apply to those who fight for the right to enjoy American standards of living nor those who insist that all tariff duties levied shall be sufficiently high to equalize the cost of production here and abroad. Did they not raise their voice in protest against being put out of business by a trade policy conceived and nourished by a group of impractical visionaries who are in fact internationalists, they would be craven cowards unworthy of American citizenship.

It is not alone the farmer who opposes the surrender of the American market to the foreigner. The hearings disclose that organized labor, who are being displaced by the foreign workingman, often from the pauper oriental field, also bitterly oppose the policy now in force. I cite Matthew Woll, vice president, American Federation of Labor, and president of America's Wage Earners' Conference; James M. Duffy, National Brotherhood of Operative Potters.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Very briefly.

Mr. DINGELL. The gentleman will concede that Matthew Woll, under cross-examination, admitted that he was not speaking for the American labor movement.

Mr. KNUTSON. Matthew Woll stated that he was speaking for—

Mr. DINGELL. Matthew Woll.

Mr. KNUTSON. Wait a minute; for the American Wage Earners League.

Mr. DINGELL. That is not the American labor movement, I state to my friend.

Mr. KNUTSON. He voiced the feeling of a majority of the members of the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. DINGELL. He was repudiated by the president of the American Federation of Labor as not speaking for the labor movement.

Mr. KNUTSON. As far as the president of the American Federation of Labor is concerned, he has been on both sides of this question.

Mr. DINGELL. If there is anyone who is spokesman for American labor, it is the president of the A. F. of L. and not Matthew Woll.

Mr. KNUTSON. I carry a card in the A. F. of L.

Mr. DINGELL. Is it in good standing?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes; it is. I pay my dues.

Mr. DINGELL. All right; put it up.

Mr. KNUTSON. I try to set an example for the gentleman.

Mr. DINGELL. I challenge the statement.

Mr. KNUTSON. Read their straightforward statements telling how the workingmen of America have been robbed of their jobs by foreign competitors. Mr. Woll's statement is to be found on pages 1366 to 1395. Incidentally, I commend a study of this able and patriotic document to those college professors who believe there should be no trade barriers between nations. There is a fine theory, but it cannot be made workable until all people are on the same living level. As we cannot draw the peasant, coolie, and peon up to our level, it follows that these intellectual oddities would have us descend to the lowest level now in force. Mr. Duffy's statement is to be found on pages 2136 to 2158. How any workingman, after reading statements such as these, can longer be a free trader is beyond me.

Mr. SOUTH. It is a fact, is it not, that the laboring man is receiving substantially more per hour and day now than he was in 1935 when the trade agreements were adopted?

Mr. KNUTSON. I have not gone into that phase of it.

Mr. SOUTH. I will say to the gentleman that it is a fact.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman is usually correct. I have very high regard for the gentleman's intellectual honesty.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The pottery workers in Japan get 4 cents an hour. The pottery workers in the United States get 75 cents an hour. As a result Japan supplies our market with 60 percent of its pottery.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is true; and it is equally true in many other lines.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield briefly.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I want the gentleman's views on a question which has troubled me somewhat, the favored-nation clause in many of our treaties. Assuming that this Government makes a reciprocal-trade agreement with Canada, we give Canada certain concessions and in return she gives us concessions, but I understand that under the favored-nation clause Mexico has as much right to claim those benefits as Canada.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is right.

Mr. O'CONNOR. What does the United States get for extending all those benefits to Mexico under the treaty with Canada?

Mr. KNUTSON. We got a thumbing of the nose and the confiscation of American property in return, may I say.

The hearings are replete with tables. In a study of such figures it is well to bear in mind that the comparisons in imports and exports are made on a valuation basis rather than quantitative. Let us take one typical case. In 1938 we exported 500,000 barrels of hydraulic cement valued at $2.32 a barrel. During the same period we imported 1,750,000 barrels of hydraulic cement, upon which a valuation of 83 cents per barrel was placed.

So our imports seem small in comparison with our exports measured in dollars, but measured in the amount of product used the story is entirely different. Measured in dollars, 500 barrels at $2.32 look as big, if not bigger than, 1,750,000 barrels at 83 cents.

Here is another glaring example: The first 11 months in 1939 we exported 7,576,391 metal filament light bulbs at an average value of 12 cents per bulb, and during the same period we imported 84,296,063 light bulbs on which an import value of only 8 mills each was placed.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes; briefly.

Mr. JENSEN. Can the gentleman explain to the House or enlighten us on the amount of free imports into this country?

Mr. KNUTSON. On a dollar valuation basis 64 percent of our imports come in free of all duty.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman tell us whether there is a trade agreement with Japan?

Mr. KNUTSON. I think not.

Mr. DINGELL. We are discussing trade agreements, are we not?

Mr. KNUTSON. I understand that we are also discussing countries that are getting all the benefits of the trade agreements, but give us nothing in return.

Mr. DINGELL. I am afraid the gentleman did not understand.

Mr. KNUTSON. The value of imported products is fixed at point of origin, hence any dollar comparison made is absolutely worthless as an index.

When the trade-treaty program was first proposed back in 1934 we were assured that the American farmer would be the chief beneficiary under its operation. Perhaps some of the advocates will explain to us how it comes that agricultural exports have declined over $104,000,000 while imports of competitive farm products have increased by $68,000,000 during the time that the trade-treaty program has been in effect. It should not be necessary for me to call to their attention the fact that before the trade program went into effect our export trade had increased 32 percent, or at the rate of 16 percent per year, from the 1932 low, while under the operation of the trade act the average increase in export trade has been only 13 percent per year.

Let us see what some of these trade agreements have done to American agriculture and industries partially dependent thereon:

Exports and imports for 11 months, 1939, by groups

WE IMPORT 500,000,000 POUNDS STARCH ANNUALLY

We have several large corn-processing concerns in the Middle West. In 1939 they turned 78,000,000 bushels of corn into starch. Seven thousand employees were required to handle this corn, each paid a minimum wage of $5 per day. The mills burn a pound of coal for every pound of starch made, and trains and trains are needed to haul the corn to the mills, and the coal from the mines to the mills. In 1935 we negotiated a trade agreement with the Netherlands. That country owns the Dutch East Indies. From those islands there now pours in on us nearly 500,000,000 pounds of starch annually, all of it produced by workers who get 25 cents for a long day. As each 34-pound lot imported displaces a bushel of corn one can readily figure the heavy indemnity levied on the American farmer, railroader, and miner.

The case of sugar is equally tragic. In Minnesota we have two beet-sugar factories which have been greatly restricted in their production of sugar, notwithstanding that we consume three times as much sugar as we are allowed to produce. The result is that the sugar acreage we could produce and consume at home is now given over to the production of wheat, corn, potatoes, and other farm crops of which we have a surplus. That situation also holds good in many other States. In 1938 the consumption of sugar was six and one-quarter million tons. Of this amount 1,800,000 tons came from Cuba. For every 100,000-ton increase in American production of sugar 25,000 Americans will be given jobs.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman is condemning the New Deal for taking care of their multimillionaire Wall Street satellites who are financially interested in the Cuban-sugar monopoly, such as Charles F. Taussig, at 111 Wall Street; Vincent Astor; and a host of others.

Mr. KNUTSON. Of course, the Cuban-sugar activities are largely controlled by the big international bankers of New York.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. And they are also big cogs in the New Deal political machine.

Mr. KNUTSON. They are the ones who get the benefit of everything we have done for Cuba, so far as sugar is concerned.

Continuing, that means 450,000 idle Americans could be put to work if the beet and cane growers were given a fair chance at the home market. We are told that we must buy at least one-third of our sugar requirements from Cuba, because she is such a good customer of ours. Let us examine the record. In the period 1935 to 1938 Cuban exports to the United States were $200,000,000 more than her imports. What kind of business is that?

This is another case of where we should go on a barter basis. That would be real reciprocity such as President McKinley advocated when he said:

The end in view is always to be the opening up of new markets for the products of our country by granting concessions to the products of other lands that we need and cannot produce ourselves and which do not involve any loss of labor to our own people but tend rather to increase their employment.

To that sort of reciprocity the Republican Party has been committed for 50 or more years. Our party has also contended for tariff rates that will give reasonable protection to the American farmer, workingman, miner, and manufacturer. It is a policy under which we have enjoyed our greatest periods of prosperity and development.

When appearing before our committee Secretary Wallace said that the foundation for the present war in Europe could be ascribed to the passage of the Fordney-McCumber Act, way back in 1922.

Secretary Hull thought that it was the Hawley-Smoot Act. Historians know that the Treaty of Versailles made this war inevitable. I do not agree with Secretaries Hull and Wallace that trade treaties make for peace. Assistant Secretary Grady told our committee that England, France, Germany, Italy, Russia, and other European countries have had such treaties for many years and yet Europe has been a cockpit ever since I can recall. Mr. Hull assured our committee that his trade policy is necessary to the promotion of peace. The act was passed in 1934 and extended for 3 years in 1937. When the original act was passed the world was at peace. Since it has been in effect, Bolivia and Paraguay have had a bloody war; Italy went into Ethiopia and Albania; Japan has ravished China; England, France, and Germany are again at each other's throats. Germany has absorbed Austria, Czechoslovakia, and Poland; and Russia's bloody hands are slowly strangling brave and honorable Finland. So much for that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, at the close of the World War, when the Democratic Underwood tariff law was in effect, our markets were swamped with importations, especially of agricultural products. They were offered at any price in order to establish dollar credits in this country. To avert disaster it was necessary for Congress to pass the emergency tariff act which materially increased import duties. That law put a stop to the dumping.

Mr. SANDAGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Briefly, to my good friend.

Mr. SANDAGER. The gentleman is broad-minded enough not to blame the trade agreement for that?

Mr. KNUTSON. I am simply citing this to show the absurdity of the New Deal contention that trade treaties make for peace.

Mr. BUCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Briefly.

Mr. BUCK. Does the gentleman feel that the extension of the Trade Agreement Act will precipitate further wars?

Mr. KNUTSON. I do not think trade agreements have anything to do with it one way or the other.

Mr. BUCK. Why does the gentleman bring it up, then?

Mr. KNUTSON. I want to show how absurd the position of the two Secretaries is.

Mr. PATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Briefly.

Mr. PATRICK. The gentleman does not interpret that to mean that it makes for peace all over the world, but rather between ourselves and other nations?

Mr. KNUTSON. I am merely stating what the Secretaries said—that it would promote better feeling and peace.

The same situation is going to present itself when the present wars terminate, but then we will find that our hands are tied with all these trade agreements in effect. What will then happen?

Let me read to you some very significant statements on that phase made in this House on Friday, February 2, by the gentleman from Missouri, Chairman CANNON, a Democrat, during the debate on the agricultural appropriation bill. These remarks are to be found on page 1022 of the RECORD.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] stated as follows:

The most serious condition that exists is the fact we are drifting straight toward the danger that followed the close of the last war. This war in Europe is going to end. That is not a matter of speculation. It is not a matter of doubt. This war is going to end. Every man on this floor remembers when the war ended in 1918. You saw wheat drop from $2.40 to 35 cents. You saw cotton drop from 20 cents to 8 cents. You saw corn drop from $1.50 to 10 cents. You saw hogs drop from $18 to $2. What precautions have you taken to avoid that situation at the end of this war? Have you done anything at all?

Are you depending on the present system? Do you not know that since September hogs have dropped from $10 to $5? You talk about this committee cutting the agricultural appropriation bill in half. Why, the bill has cut hogs in half. When hogs dropped from $10 to $5 did wages drop? Oh, no. Wages today are higher than they were in September. Did the price of farm machinery and fertilizer drop? Oh, no. Do you know that since the 1st day of January wheat has fallen 11 cents a bushel? What do you suppose fertilizer has done, the fertilizer that grows the wheat? Wheat has dropped, as I said, 11 cents, and the fertilizer that grows this wheat has gone up $8.50.

What is the system doing for us? If this system is failing to maintain the farmer's prices, when we have subsidies running into the millions of dollars, when we have a war over on the other side, when we have a drought in a large part of the country, when hogs are falling 50 percent and wheat is falling off 11 cents a bushel, what do you suppose is going to happen when this war closes?

Mr. Chairman, if the Committee on Agriculture does not bring in a bill here and this do-nothing Congress adjourns and goes home, and the war closes, and farm prices go to perdition again, the farmers of this country will have a pitchfork under the coat-tails of a number of distinguished men who sat idly by and let it happen.

I will ask my good friend the Speaker what he expects to happen to the price of cotton and corn and hogs when the war ends. What does he suggest in that contingency? Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that when this war ends the situation will be worse than before, because in 1920 we lent the people in Europe $10,000,000,000.

The prosperity we enjoyed following the war and the temporary stabilized price of farm products was due to the fact that we were consuming our own money. We lent that money to be spent in the United States.

Mr. Chairman, you can be very certain we are not going to lend them money this time. They will get no money from the United States. As a result there will be an immediate collapse of prices that will bring a terrific reaction on this country such as we have never seen before, not even in 1932. I plead with the Committee on Agriculture to at least meet and express some willingness to consider a bill. There are half a dozen measures offered—I do not know which is good and which is bad—but they ought at least to meet and consider a bill.

The new dealers take the position that Congress is not qualified to exercise its constitutional function of levying excise and tariff taxes. As Congress is now constituted that may be true, but it will not be true of future Congresses where Republicans predominate.

Mr. PATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Briefly.

Mr. PATRICK. I would like to know if the gentleman is taking the position that the trade agreements can be so arranged that the end of the war can be foreseen and any drop in prices forestalled.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does not the gentleman believe, with all these trade agreements in effect, when the war is over and the collapse comes, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] foresees, and as we all foresee, that our hands will be tied, we will not be free to pass an emergency tariff to keep this stuff from coming in and depressing domestic prices, because these 22 trade agreements have been extended to 64 other countries.

Mr. BUCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BUCK. Was there any item mentioned in the remarks by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] which has been affected by a trade agreement?

Mr. KNUTSON. I am merely bringing out the fact that when this war closes we will not be in a position to pass emergency tariff legislation to keep our market from being flooded by countries that are bankrupt and impoverished and who will want to establish dollar credit in this country.

Mr. BUCK. I understood what the gentleman stated, but if these items have not been affected by any trade agreement, what is there to prevent the Congress from legislating in the event that this dire catastrophe occurs?

Mr. KNUTSON. How can we possibly hope to legislate to keep our markets from being flooded with competitive products when our hands are tied by 22 trade treaties that have all the effect of law? Our only salvation lies in defeating the proposal to extend the Reciprocal Trade Act for another 3 years. If we do that, we will be free to act in any emergency that may arise.

Mr. BUCK. Are those items affected by trade agreements?

Mr. KNUTSON. What items?

Mr. BUCK. The ones referred to by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. KNUTSON. I am using them as illustrations.

Mr. BUCK. Why not use items affected by the trade agreements?

Mr. KNUTSON. Because everything will be affected. You can go right down the line from A to Z and everything will be affected adversely when this war is over.

Mr. BUCK. The use of the speech by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] is just another red herring drawn across the trail.

Mr. KNUTSON. Of course, anyone who refuses to be a rubber stamp is a red herring, in the gentleman's eyes.

We were told times without number in the 1932 campaign that one of the first tasks that the Democrats would set themselves to in the event they were entrusted with the conduct of the Government, would be the repeal of the Hawley-Smoot Act. Up to date that promise has not been kept. Why? Did not Majority Leader Henry Rainey, late Speaker of the House, "let the cat out of the bag" when, during the course of the debate on the Collier bill in 1932, he said:

Lower this tariff drastically? You (Republicans) will not do it, and we (Democrats) dare not do it with conditions as they are. We do not want this market flooded with the products of cheap labor in other countries.

For years we were told that the United States was the highest protected country in the world. That statement was false and without the least foundation. In 1928, when the Fordney-McCumber law was in effect, the United States was No. 9 among nations in the ratio of duties to imports with 13.3 percent. The United Kingdom was No. 11 with 10.9 percent.

In 1934, when the Hawley-Smoot law was in effect and before it had been tampered with, we had dropped to eleventh place with the ratio standing at 18.4 percent, whereas the United Kingdom had advanced to sixth place with a ratio of 27 percent. In 1937, the United States was thirteenth with a ratio of 15.6 percent, and the United Kingdom had advanced to fifth place with a ratio of 23 percent.

Now let us see what the picture is as it pertains to imports in relation to population. The customs duties collected per capita in United States dollars in 1937 gives $22.84 to Great Britain as against $3.56 for the United States. These figures knock into a cocked hat all contentions that the Hawley-Smoot Act was excessively high.

Why have not you new dealers kept your 1932 promises to repeal the Hawley-Smoot law? Simply because you did not dare do so. Had you kept your word, Roosevelt would have been a one-term-ite. So you proceed, through these trade agreements, to do piecemeal what you did not dare do openly and courageously. In the 22 treaties already made, you have lowered the rate on 1,012 items, of which 162 were strictly agricultural, many of the reductions by as much as 50 percent. How does that square with Mr. Roosevelt's promise made to the American farmer at Baltimore during the 1932 campaign when he said:

I know of no effective excessively high tariff duties on farm products. I do not intend that such duties shall be lowered.

In spite of that promise to the American farmer, Mr. Roosevelt has permitted the duty on 162 agricultural products to be lowered. Do you wonder that the farmers have lost confidence in him, if not their admiration for his melodious voice?

Let us see how that promise has been kept: In the Canadian trade treaty the rate on cattle weighing 700 pounds or more each was reduced from 3 cents per pound to 2 cents per pound; other cattle, from 2 cents per pound to 1½ cents per pound; swine, from 2 cents per pound to 1 cent per pound; pork, fresh or chilled, but not frozen, 2½ cents per pound to 1¼ cents per pound; bacon, hams, and shoulders, and other pork, 3¼ cents per pound to 2 cents per pound; whole milk, fresh or sour, 6½ cents per gallon to 3¼ cents per gallon; dried buttermilk, 3 cents per pound to 1½ cents per pound; eggs in the shell, from 10 cents per dozen to 5 cents per dozen; rye, 15 cents per bushel to 12 cents per bushel; potato starch, from 2½ cents per pound to 1¼ cents per pound; palm-kernel oil, from 1 cent to ½ cent per pound; Cheddar cheese, from 7 cents per pound to 5 cents per pound. The rates on other cheeses are correspondingly reduced. Do you wonder that the American farmer no longer has confidence in the promises of this administration?

The Roosevelt-Hull idea of reciprocity reminds me of the chef who prepared a big stew for some gathering—half rabbit and half horse, one of each.

If this law is going to be extended, we shall insist that it be amended to permit parties aggrieved to go into court for redress. This inalienable right is now denied them. We insist that hereafter no concessions be made on products we ourselves produce in abundance; that in future negotiations due consideration be given to domestic cost of production. We demand that henceforth all agreements be openly arrived at by responsible and known agents of the Federal Government who have practical knowledge of production costs and other essential qualifications. Finally, we demand that the Congress take back into its own hands the power to act upon trade treaties made in the future before they shall become operative, and that upon their expiration treaties now in effect be rewritten along these lines. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, when a subject such as reciprocal-trade agreements has been before the Congress for 5 continuous years, it is futile to assume that votes can be changed by debate on the floor. But those who, like myself, have given much study to the program and have supported it because they sincerely believe it to be a method of promoting the national welfare welcome these periodic opportunities of publicly expressing the reasons for our support. In all frankness, I admit the majority report, filed with the resolution, covers the whole field and more ably than I could individually do, but I find satisfaction in publicly expressing my approval of the program and in urging my colleagues in the House to support it.

On February 3, 1939, I addressed the House on this subject, entitling my remarks "Foreign Trade—the Road to Peace and Prosperity." At that time I pointed out that we were dealing with an economic and not a political issue and I urged the Congress to treat it as such. I still urge that viewpoint, although recent developments give me no encouragement to believe that my Republican colleagues in the House will treat this other than as a political issue. Only last Wednesday night my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], addressing an enthusiastic Republican rally in my district, outlined the five major plans of the Republican Party "to bring about the saving of America," number four of which was "Repeal the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, so that the influx of foreign imports of a competitive character may be stopped and our agriculture may have an opportunity to get back on its feet." But not all Republicans share that view, because the Republican nominee for the Vice Presidency in 1936, Col. Frank Knox,

I am going to talk very frankly about the tariff, because I believe it is one of the major subjects upon which the Republican Party must drastically change its traditional policy.

Next, let us explode the theory that one of the ways to help the farmer is to raise the tariff on farm products. The major products of American agriculture are wheat, corn, cotton, tobacco, and lard. Practically all of these products are produced by American farmers in excess of our domestic needs. Whenever this is true, the price of that commodity is fixed by world market conditions and cannot be controlled, except artificially, in this country. To attempt to help the farmer by promising him higher and higher tariffs on his products is naught but a red herring drawn across the trail to divert him from attack on the excessively high tariff rates on domestic manufactures. It is time that the farmer recognizes this for what it is. It is nothing less than an effort to keep him satisfied to pay tariff-created monopoly prices for everything he buys, and to continue to sell what he does produce at world prices. * * *

And the record of our committee hearings is filled with the comments of other distinguished Republicans to the same effect.

The tariff is undoubtedly an economic issue but lends itself to the uses of politicians because of the difficulty of the average man to understand the intricate principles of the production, distribution, and consumption of goods and services.

The economist's voice is too often a lone one on the prairie of modern mercantilism. When he tries to reason beyond the "seen" into the "unseen" he is usually condemned by the so-called practical man as a theorist. But he continues to hope that some day his point of view will be accepted and that the country will cast aside its fallacies and adopt a consistent and reasonable commercial policy.

Most important among these fallacies in the field of international economics are: First, the undue emphasis upon money as a measure of national wealth; second, the attempts of the nations of the world to attain economic self-sufficiency; and third, the undue emphasis upon exports alone.

Economic activity has a purpose. That purpose is to produce goods and services and to put them into the hands of the people. Under our arrangements, this is accomplished by the profit system, in which money is, or should be, nothing said at Pierre, S. Dak., on January 12, 1939: more than the means to an end.

One of our twentieth century fallacies is that we place too much emphasis upon money, the means, and not enough upon the goods and services, the end. Money is a measure of wealth and is only of value as a medium by which goods and services can be obtained. We find ourselves applying to the national interest the same criteria that we erroneously apply to the individual. The more money an individual succeeds in accumulating, relative to his fellow men, the richer he is considered to be. But money is of value to the individual only because he can exchange it for things that he needs or wants. Gold cannot be eaten, as King Midas discovered to his sorrow. A man with all of the world's gold would be poor indeed unless he could exchange it for the goods and services of others. And so it is with nations. National wealth consists of food for the people to eat, clothing for them to wear, shelter to protect them from the cold, medical services, and those luxuries that make for an abundant life. The wealth of a nation is not measured by the amount of gold that is amassed. All students of economics since Adam Smith published his masterpiece, The Wealth of Nations, in the same year that our forefathers signed the Declaration of Independence, are in agreement on this.

Still we persist in the old fallacies. We continue to think in terms of money measurement instead of in terms of goods. We prefer, through export subsidies, to give our goods away instead of using them. We stress money-making rather than economic welfare. We continue to encourage exports at the expense of imports, notwithstanding the fact that we emerged from the World War in 1918 as the largest creditor nation in the world.

THE SHACKLES OF ECONOMIC SELF-SUFFICIENCY

No one would maintain that this Nation, with all of its abundant resources, its skilled engineers, and capable workers, would be better off if each of the 48 States set up prohibitive tariff walls against each other. This country is the largest free-trade area of the world. The regional specialization thereby made possible yields to us a per capita abundance of economic goods unequalled in the world's history. In fact, the cry today is that we must restrict production in order to make business profitable. How poverty-stricken our imaginations are when we maintain, with straight faces, that we have too much food, too many automobiles, and too many respectable houses.

Yet that is precisely what the nations of the world are doing. They are insulating themselves, economically, against each other and depriving themselves of the advantages of geographical specialization for the sake of making work for themselves. Nobody has yet suggested that in our public-works program we do away with shovels and provide the workers with teaspoons. But, would not that be logical if the policies that the nations of the world are following, and which our opponents seem to want us to adopt, are true; namely, that we live to work rather than work to live? Of what profit is it to France, for example, that imports of wheat are restricted when its people are forced to pay over $2 a bushel for the wheat that they consume? Are the German people made wealthy by an embargo on imports which forces them to purchase costly and inefficient substitutes? Have the Italians added to their wealth by imposing prohibitive duties on goods which they are ill-equipped to produce? There can be no virtue in an economy of scarcity. We should, if we claim to be rational men, pursue policies that make for an economy of abundance.

NEED FOR LARGER, RATHER THAN SMALLER, FOREIGN TRADE

It is axiomatic that if a nation is to sell, it must buy. If we are to export we must import. This is an age of specialization and some of our most efficient and most important industries—including agriculture—are vitally dependent upon export outlets. As Secretary Wallace has pointed out, our exports of cotton alone have normally represented the product of over 50,000,000 acres of cropland. Our exports of lard, which in 1923 accounted for 54 percent of our domestic production, declined to 17 percent in 1937. Producers of fruits, grain, tobacco, automobiles, office appliances, and industrial and agricultural machinery are also vitally interested in exports. Cut off their foreign markets and you plunge them into depression.

Our economic life is completely intermeshed. When we introduce into any important segment of it, forces that operate to reduce markets, we start the vicious spiral of unemployment. Although it is true that the United States market is the largest and best market in the world, our economic life is keyed into that of the world and reacts directly to changes in world economic conditions. When the shoe manufacturers of New England, out of fear of a flood of imports, do all they can to induce Congress to keep out the negligible imports of foreign-made shoes, they are encouraging those very forces that help to create their own economic difficulties. For, by encouraging the restriction of imports, they are helping to dry up the markets for those of our industries that are dependent upon exports. To put it briefly, it is vital to the shoe manufacturers of New England that the automobile workers of Michigan and the farmers of our great Mid-Western areas have the purchasing power with which to buy the output of their shoe factories. As pointed out in the majority report of the Ways and Means Committee, it is far better to enjoy a somewhat smaller percentage of a very large market than a larger percentage of a small market. Is it better to have 95 percent of something or 100 percent of nothing?

The arguments of the high protectionists, unfortunately, have a popular appeal because of the very use of the term "protective." That term appeals because it is not generally realized that the tariff is too frequently beneficial only to a particular producing group. But we in Congress who have the national welfare at heart, should confine ourselves to measures designed to promote the national welfare and not that of special interests. From the national point of view high tariffs are really restrictive tariffs and should be so called. For, in order to be protective to any particular group, a tariff must be restrictive of imports.

Advocates of restrictive tariffs frequently point to imports as the cause of business depressions. The truth of the matter is that imports provide a convenient scapegoat for our economic ills. Even the most casual comparison of domestic business activity and imports shows that there is a close correspondence between prosperity at home and the magnitude of our foreign trade. When times are good, both imports and exports are relatively large; when times are bad, both imports and exports are relatively small. I do not say that a large foreign trade is the cause, nor that it is the result, of enlarged domestic production. But, I do most emphatically say that healthy conditions at home and a substantial foreign trade go hand in hand.

The Republican opposition, in their attempt to minimize the repressive effects of the Smoot-Hawley Act, have given the impression that our foreign trade declined to no greater degree than did the foreign trade of other countries. But such a contention is not substantiated by the official statistics. The facts are that imports into the United States in 1932 were only 30 percent of what they had been in 1929; in all other countries—average of imports into 108 countries, excluding the United States—they were 40 percent. And, exports from the United States in 1932 were only 31 percent as large as in 1929, whereas exports from the other 108 countries were 40 percent as large.

There has also been an attempt to show that most of the decline in our imports in the depression period was occasioned by falling prices rather than by a decrease in physical volume. Again the facts are at variance with the argument of the opposition, for according to the index of physical volume of imports published regularly by the Department of Commerce, imports declined almost 40 percent between 1929 and 1932.

Restricting our foreign trade as a remedy for economic depression is analogous to resorting to exposure to a blizzard as a cure for pneumonia. The need in such times is not to restrict and reduce trade but to encourage it. Markets abroad mean markets at home. Together they mean jobs and improved national income.

TO ACCOMPLISH A LARGER FOREIGN TRADE, RECIPROCAL TARIFF REDUCTIONS ARE NECESSARY

Now I know the opposition will call all of this free-trade doctrine, and in a utopian world it would be an argument for just such a policy. But, in the world as it is, a world in which all countries are following mercantilistic gods, it is an argument for continuing a policy designed to remove excessive trade barriers. We do not advocate abolition of reasonable trade restrictions. The trade-agreements program, in the hands of this, the most powerful country economically in the world, is the one rational program in a universe of destructive ideologies. The program is not a panacea for all the world's economic ills, but it is a force operating in the right direction. If we abandon our policy of trying to break the log-jam of unreasonably restrictive international trade barriers, what is there to prevent a return to brute force? Economic self-sufficiency is the signpost leading to just that! Restricting certain imports for the sake of stimulating infant industries is one thing; prohibiting all imports is another.

We all agree that foreign countries should lower their trade barriers for the benefit of our exports. Even our Republican opponents stress that! But, just how do they expect that to be accomplished if we are unwilling to scale down some of our own prohibitive trade barriers?

Until we emerged from the World War as the world's largest creditor nation it was logical for us to have a so-called favorable balance of trade. For in those days we were heavy borrowers abroad. In order to secure the necessary foreign exchange with which to pay our debts and debt charges it was necessary that we sell more than we bought. All of that, however, was changed by the World War. It then became necessary for us to develop an import balance if we were to collect not only the war debts but other debts as well. But, we chose—deliberately and foolishly—to restrict imports, while trying with might and main to develop our export markets. Instead of lowering our tariffs we raised them, first by the Emergency Tariff Act of 1921, later by the Fordney-McCumber Act of 1922, and finally by the Smoot-Hawley Act of 1930. Like the dope addict who finds that one dose of the life-numbing drug leads to another, we betrayed ourselves into believing that the way out of depression was to kill off our foreign trade by jacking trade barriers higher and higher.

Let us not be blind to the fact that the Smoot-Hawley Act did not initiate us into prohibitive tariffs. We were initiated in 1921, and took our higher degrees in 1922 and 1930. The minority members of our committee seem to delight in maintaining that the Smoot-Hawley Act did not stimulate retaliation against our trade by foreign countries. They apparently want to imply that the Smoot-Hawley Act was moderate, and in doing so they let the cat out of the bag. If foreign nations heightened their tariff walls against us prior to 1930, it was because many of our rates were already prohibitive as a result of the all-too-successful efforts of Messrs. Fordney and McCumber. The Smoot-Hawley rates, coming, as they did, after the depression began, operated to freeze still further the channels of trade. Ever since the war foreigners found it difficult to penetrate this market with their wares. The act of 1930 accelerated a movement that had already begun. In that respect we agree with our Republican opponents, but they refuse to admit the extent of the acceleration.

In his book entitled "Tariff Retaliation, Repercussions of the Hawley-Smoot Bill" Joseph M. Jones, Jr., states that—

National agitation in regard to a general tariff revision is a natural phenomenon in American history, but never has the United States in peacetime experienced such an extended and violent foreign reaction to any piece of local legislation as that attending the Tariff Act of 1930. The often-quoted formal and official protests of 33 foreign nations to the United States Government sink into insignificance beside the general protest and indignation of the populations of the principal trading nations of the world as expressed through an outraged press, mass meetings, and resolutions of trade, industrial, and labor organizations in the various countries.

His investigation, he writes, disclosed the effects of the Hawley-Smoot Act "as wide and profound, repercussions which impose urgent reflections upon our entire commercial policy." These repercussions he divides into three classes, from the immediate to the more remote, as follows:

Firstly, widespread retaliation and discrimination against American exports; secondly, very definite effects upon the commercial policies of the principal trading nations of the world and upon the general development of the principles of commercial policy throughout the world; and, thirdly, as a result of the developments included in the first two classes, the fatal undermining of the principles upon which American tariff and commercial treaty making are based.

In its World Economic Survey, 1931-32, the Economic Intelligence Service of the League of Nations stated that—

The whole movement (toward higher tariffs) was undoubtedly accentuated both by the alarm and resentment felt in many countries as the discussions of the new Hawley-Smoot tariff dragged on in the United States Congress from May 1929 to June 1930, and by the real effects of that tariff when it went into operation. It was followed quickly by new tariffs in many other countries, among others Canada, Cuba, Mexico, France, Italy, Spain, Australia, New Zealand. In the case of the British Dominions, higher general tariffs were accompanied by an increased measure of imperial preference, and the general idea of a more extensive system of preferential duties with the British Empire was appreciably advanced.

The League of Nations World Economic Survey for 1932-33 referred to the Tariff Act of 1930 in the following terms:

The Hawley-Smoot tariff in the United States was the signal for an outburst of tariff-making activity in other countries, partly, at least, by way of reprisals. Extensive increases in duties were made almost immediately by Canada, Cuba, Mexico, France, Italy, Spain. During 1931 general tariff increases were announced by India, Peru, Argentina, Brazil, China, Italy, Lithuania.

Whether as reprisals against the Tariff Act of 1930 or as defensive measures for the purpose of safeguarding endangered currencies—threatened by the sudden curtailment of exports to the United States and continuing imports from, and debt payments to, the United States—the wave of foreign trade barriers which followed the enactment of the Tariff Act of 1930 clearly was caused in large part by the far-reaching effects of that law.

The new and higher rates of duty imposed under the Tariff Act of 1930 effectively cut down the volume and value of our imports of commodities from foreign countries and ipso facto reduced the purchasing power of foreigners for our export products. For this reason the Tariff Act of 1930 may be regarded as a wall which prevented the exportable products of our farms, mines, and factories from leaving the country for markets where they were desired, as well as a barrier against imports of foreign products. The foreign demand for many of our export products required more purchasing power than our dwindling imports of foreign commodities and gold imports could yield to foreigners.

Writing in 1933, Dr. Harold G. Moulton, of the Brookings Institution, summed up the effects of the Tariff Act of 1930 on United States export trade and on the commercial policies of foreign countries as follows:

This European movement (toward higher protection) was stimulated by the alarm and resentment felt in many countries over the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act in the United States, which, after a year of discussion, was finally passed in June 1930. This act was passed at a time when the balance of economic argument was overwhelmingly against higher tariffs, particularly in the United States; it was passed over the protest of many leaders of public opinion, businessmen and professional economists alike; it was passed despite the plain threat of retaliation by many other countries—passed on the assumption that we could simultaneously still further curtail our imports, collect our debts in dollars (earned by foreigners from sales in the United States), and expand our exports to foreign countries.

The results have been all that were anticipated by those who condemned the measure in advance.

Since 1930 foreign countries have done more than increase their tariffs. They have invented new devices to keep out imports. The very instruments of which the Republicans complain—exchange controls, quotas, and clearing and payments agreements—were inaugurated in part, at least, in retaliation against our own embargo policy. These types of import control began in 1931 or 1932, and now have spread throughout most of the civilized world.

There are at present only 5 European countries which do not have exchange restrictions; 12 Latin American countries have them, and so do a number of other important countries. All European countries, at least 5 countries of Latin America, and Canada have clearing or payments agreements, or combinations of the two. Five European countries employ import quotas as an integral part of their protectionist policy. In most cases quotas were first introduced unilaterally, and later became the subject of bilateral negotiation in trade and clearing agreements. Frequently they are plainly retaliatory.

Yet, our opponents would have us abandon our efforts to break down these barriers by abandoning the trade-agreements program—the only effective method by which we may accomplish this essential objective. They talk as though we have been lowering our tariffs unilaterally since 1934, and they minimize the reciprocal nature of the agreements now in force. The concessions that we have obtained from foreign countries have been real and numerous, as shown clearly in the record of the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee.

MOST-FAVORED-NATION POLICY ESSENTIAL

Chief Justice Hughes, when he was Republican Secretary of State back in 1923, enunciated the unconditional most-favored-nation policy for the United States. It has not been, and in truth should not be, a partisan issue. The United States steadfastly has held throughout its history to a policy of nondiscrimination in its foreign trade. What our opponents fail to realize is that there is no difference between discriminations and preferential arrangements. A preferential agreement with a foreign country is a discrimination against other countries to the extent that they are interested in the commodities on which the preferences are granted. The only exception to our policy of nonpreferential agreements has been in our arrangement with Cuba, which is explained without difficulty by the geographic and historic position of that country.

If we should embark upon a program of preferential bilateral agreements, we would be waving discrimination in the faces of all other countries. It would be a clear invitation to immediate retaliation—a step which foreign countries are only too ready and too willing to take. Under the trade-agreements program we have but recently acquired most-favored-nation treatment from Canada, France, and other countries. All these advantages the opposition would throw away in exchange for a policy that has been tried and found wanting.

Our opponents claim that under the most-favored-nation policy we give something in exchange for nothing. That is not correct. By a careful selection of commodities, concessions are granted, in each trade agreement, only on those imported products of which the country in question is the principal supplier. The foreign country, in its turn, guarantees that our products shall receive most-favored-nation treatment in its market, and that if in a subsequent agreement with some third country, it grants further tariff concessions, we shall have automatically extended to our exports the same favorable treatment. Such a policy, even from the most selfish point of view, is just good common horse sense.

Some contend that because of our most-favored-nation policy, Japan—with whom we have no trade agreement—has shared unduly in the concessions that we have granted to other countries; this is not borne out by facts. Actually, less than 3 percent of the imports from Japan enter at rates of duty that have been lowered by trade agreements. Such arguments apparently are intended to scare and to confuse the uninformed; they appeal to fear rather than to reason and fact.

STATISTICAL RESULTS OF THE PROGRAM

We in this House could go on for hours trying to prove, or disprove, by bare statistics, that the trade-agreements program has been a success or a failure. All sorts of statistics appear in the record of the hearings on this resolution to extend the Trade Agreements Act. Some of the figures presented by those opposed to the program have been juggled in such a way as to belittle the importance of the export concessions that have been obtained, and to exaggerate the importance of those that have been granted. I like to think of myself as a reasonably intelligent citizen, and I must confess that a simple, common-sense analysis of the official statistics leads me unhesitatingly to the conclusion that the agreements have been beneficial to the country.

But, before getting lost in a labyrinth of statistics, let us not lose sight of an important logical fact. Our technical experts and negotiators have worked hard—all of them—to try to scale down excessively high trade barriers. Now, would it not be strange if, in a period of economic recovery, imports and exports of those commodities that are still subject to substantial restrictions of one kind or another showed a markedly more rapid increase than those that are relatively free of restrictions? Let us not forget that under the terms of the Trade Agreements Act itself our tariff duties cannot be reduced by more than 50 percent. Moreover, in most cases reductions have been confined to those rates that have been relatively high. Why, then, should we expect that in a period of business expansion, imports of such commodities would increase much more rapidly than imports that are either free of duty or subject to only very low rates of duty? The fact that such raw materials as rubber and tin enter free of duty is a clear sign that we need them. Only necessities could ever have survived on the free list throughout the last three tariff-raising orgies of Congress. Therefore, it is only logical to expect that expanding industry at home will cause imports of these products to expand more rapidly than imports of products that are either more competitive with domestic production, or subject to high rates of duty.

Yet, in spite of this logic, which applies to exports as well as to imports, the statistical picture is extremely favorable to the program. If this is not a glowing tribute to the Yankee horse-trading sense of our negotiators, I do not know what is. It is a clear demonstration that the United States has not been "sold down the river."

I do not intend to present an elaborate statistical picture. But a recent release—January 13, 1940—by the United States Tariff Commission presents as unbiased and as clear a statistical picture as I have seen, and it shows that, speaking generally, our trade with countries with which we have negotiated trade agreements has increased substantially more rapidly than has our trade with all countries. The tabulation appears in the majority report, but I am submitting it for the RECORD because it impresses me as being about the clearest statistical summary that was presented to the committee. It shows the preagreement and postagreement trade of the United States with the principal countries with which trade agreements were made before 1937.

Agreements negotiated since then are still too recent to afford a statistical basis for comparison, and so are not included. For each of the trade-agreement countries a comparison is made between the trade of a period of at least 2 years preceding the date when the agreement went into effect and the trade during the entire period from that date through October 1939. The 10 countries covered by the tabulation accounted, in 1938, for 92 percent of the total exports from the United States to all countries with which trade agreements had been made before 1937, and for 90 percent of total imports from all such countries.

With the exception only of France and our imports from Brazil, the Netherlands, and Colombia, trade with all of the countries listed, both imports and exports, has increased more rapidly than has our trade with all countries. Furthermore, with the sole exception of Belgium, the figures show that our exports to trade-agreement countries have increased more rapidly than have our imports from those countries. Perhaps I should, in the light of this and for the sake of consistency, be critical of our negotiators for having bargained too well.

NOTE.—Includes all the principal trade-agreement countries except Switzerland and Netherlands West Indies. Export statistics of the United States show but a small fraction of the goods which actually go ultimately to Switzerland, the bulk of the export trade being conducted through third countries. Although the general provisions of the trade agreement with the Netherlands covered the Netherlands West Indies, it included no concessions on either side with respect to specific articles entering into the trade between those islands and the United States.

AGRICULTURE BENEFITED

But, this is not all. Official statistics also show that agriculture has benefited considerably from the program. Between 1935 and 1938 exports of agricultural products to trade-agreement countries increased 51 percent, whereas to all other countries they declined by about 2 percent. If cotton is eliminated from the picture, agricultural exports to trade-agreement countries increased 118 percent, and to non-trade agreement countries 47 percent. And, the decline in our exports of cotton cannot, by any stretch of the imagination, be blamed on the trade-agreements program.

There is little reason for alarm because of agricultural imports when it is considered that only a small part of the imports of agricultural commodities are competitive with farm products grown in the United States. Six agricultural products not grown at all in this country; namely, rubber, coffee, cocoa beans, tea, and bananas, accounted for 45 percent of total agricultural imports in 1938. Noncompetitive agricultural imports that enter free of duty account for two-thirds of our total agricultural imports, and the remaining agricultural imports—those that are dutiable—amount to less than half of our agricultural exports. Even these imports of dutiable agricultural products have been occasioned, to a considerable extent in recent years, by droughts and crop shortages in the United States.

NUMBER OF AGRICULTURAL CONCESSIONS IN COMPARISON WITH INDUSTRIAL CONCESSIONS

In an attempt to align agriculture against trade agreements, the opposition has stressed the number of concessions which have been made on agricultural products. They attempt to show that agriculture has been discriminated against in trade agreements by stating that the rates on from 150 to 200—Tariff Commission count, 161—agricultural products had been reduced. Anyone who has examined the record must know that many of the reductions, in effect, relate to border trade with Canada. The United States reduced the tariff on a number of Canadian imports and Canada in turn reduced the rates on our exports of similar products to that country.

Those same critics make no mention of the 800 or 900 reductions on other schedules of the Tariff Act, many of which were a positive benefit to farmers. More rates of duty were reduced in the metals and manufactures schedule—schedule 3 of the Tariff Act of 1930—alone than was the case in the agricultural products and provisions—schedule 7 of the Tariff Act of 1930. There have been 226 reductions in the duty in the metals and manufactures schedule. I have not heard those claiming to represent agriculture mention anything about these reductions and the many other reductions in the other schedules of manufactured products, which reductions have been an aid to agriculture.

FRESH APPLES

In the valley of Virginia our chief export crop is fresh apples, amounting to about 15 percent of total production. For the Eastern States, including the big apple-producing States of New York and Pennsylvania, the average is about 12 percent. Without an export market every commercial orchardist in the East faces ruin.

The most important foreign apple markets are in Europe, where a large number of concessions have been obtained in recent trade agreements. The only concession on apples granted by the United States was in the Canadian agreement. Practically all of the negligible imports of the United States originate in Canada. The following Tariff Commission tables present the picture of exports and imports and the valuable concessions obtained in 17 trade agreements.

FARMERS AS CONSUMERS

In addition to the gains to farmers as producers in expanding both the domestic and foreign markets for his products, they gain as consumers. The main purpose of a program of lowering tariffs is to encourage trade to follow broad lines of economic advantage so that there will be more goods and services available to all. Trade concessions are important in bringing industrial prices more nearly in line with farm prices. It is difficult to say how much the concessions we have granted on industrial products in trade agreements have influenced the breaking up of rigid prices of industrial products. Surely the 800 or 900 rates on industrial products which have been reduced have, at least, prevented some prices from getting further out of line.

According to the Tariff Commission the average reduction in agricultural products was 11 percent in total dutiable imports of this whole schedule, which includes fish. This compares with the reduction of 25 percent in the metals and manufactures schedule, 27 percent in the wood and manufactures schedule, and 29 percent in the papers and books schedule.

Furthermore, the proportion subject to reduced rates in the agricultural schedule, including fish, was 28 percent. This compares to 61 percent for metals and manufactures, 74 percent for wood and manufactures, 92 percent for spirits, wines, and other beverages, and 61 percent for papers and books, clearly refuting the contention that agriculture has been singled out for discriminatory treatment. The farmer as a consumer of industrial products has definitely gained in the reduction of some of the prohibitory rates of the Hawley-Smoot tariff.

In the light of all of the facts, it is difficult for me to see how any Member of this Congress who has the economic welfare of the Nation at heart, can be opposed to the proposal that the Trade Agreements Act be extended for 3 more years. Partisanship has no place in the consideration of any measure which is so vital to the welfare of our country. I urge the passage of this resolution. I do not see how it is possible for anyone who has made an unbiased and intelligent study of the question to do otherwise. [Applause.]

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes. I hope to continue this discussion for at least a few minutes without mentioning either the Democratic Party or the Republican Party. I have prepared what I believe to be a statement of the effect of the reciprocal-trade treaties on agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, the farmers of the United States are greatly concerned about their share of the foreign market. It is their contention that they are being outraded by the industrial sections of this country in the making of reciprocal-trade treaties. There is substantial evidence that this is the case, despite protestations from the Secretary of State and others engaged in negotiating trade treaties. The best evidence in this regard is the gradual reduction of agricultural exports and the increasing of industrial exports. In 1934, the first year of the reciprocal-trade treaties, agricultural exports totaled 32.1 percent of our entire export business. This has been gradually reduced until in 1939 agriculture's share of the export trade was only 21 percent. The purchasing power of the national farm income today is three-fourths of what it was in 1910 to 1914, when the farmer was able to exchange his commodity dollar for manufactured articles on a fairly even basis.

It is interesting to study the general trend of exports from the United States. In 1938 the total value of all exports was $3,057,169,000. Of this amount, $827,546,000, or 27.1 percent, was agricultural products, leaving the balance of $2,229,623,000, or 72.9 percent, for nonagricultural or industrial exports. In the year 1939, ending December 31, we find that the total value of all exports equaled $3,123,869,000. Of this amount, $655,583,000, or 21 percent of the total, were agricultural exports, leaving the balance of $2,468,286,000, or 79 percent, for nonagricultural or industrial exports. The industrial exports in 1939 increased $238,663,000 over 1938, while the agricultural exports declined $171,963,000 during the same period. The total agricultural exports would have been reduced another 10 percent had it not been for the subsidy or indemnity payment used to sell such commodities as wheat, wheat flour, cotton, tobacco, butter, nuts, and fruits in foreign countries. The value of these commodities exported by subsidy payments total well over $65,000,000.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON. Not now.

It was interesting to note that during the hearings on the extension of the reciprocal-trade agreements that the State Department opposed the export of farm commodities by subsidy payment. This is no doubt another reason why agriculture feels it is not receiving its proper consideration at the hands of those who are now negotiating the reciprocal-trade treaties. One hundred and eighteen million bushels of wheat of the 1938 crop were sold for export, largely through subsidy payments averaging 30 cents per bushel. Statistics furnished by the Department of Agriculture prove that the farmer benefited to the extent of about $65,000,000 from this export, or, in other words, it meant an increase in price of about 20 cents per bushel. This increase in price was secured by a subsidy payment of $26,000,000. I ask in all sincerity, What would have been the situation of the wheat farmer in the United States had it not been for this export subsidy? In view of this great benefit to the farmer, how can the Secretary of State and others engaged in negotiating reciprocal-trade treaties oppose the subsidizing of farm exports?

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON. Not now. A comparison of the 4-month pre-war period, September to December 1938, in comparison with the war period of the same months during 1939 is most startling when it comes to the export of farm commodities. The farmers of the United States are going to pay a lot for the European war that is not our war. After the declaration of war England set aside all the concessions made in the reciprocal-trade agreements through quotas and the purchase of foodstuffs in other countries. This has resulted in an increase in the purchase of war supplies in the United States but a great decrease in the purchase of agricultural commodities. As a result of this there is great activity in certain industrial sections of the United States, but it is in reality only a temporary prosperity, and everyone knows there will be a serious deflation in these commodities when the war is over. The unfortunate part is that this industrial prosperity has created the impression that there is an increasing agricultural prosperity as a result of it. For the 4-month period, September 1 to December 31, 1939, there is a total gain of $217,845,000 in total exports, or a gain of 21 percent, over the same period last year. Of this amount the agricultural products gained $11,719,000, but a further analysis of the figures indicates that had it not been for greatly increased exports of cotton for war purposes, agricultural products would have shown a decline of $56,398,000. Cotton exports for the 4-month period, September 1 to December 31, 1939, were valued at $155,475,000 as compared to $87,358,000 for the same period in 1938. Tobacco, fresh and dried fruits all suffered greatly reduced volume. During this 4-month war period we exported only $21,394,000 worth of tobacco as compared to $80,406,000 during the same period in 1938. This was a loss in export of $59,012,000. Fresh fruit exports were reduced approximately 50 percent.

In the 4-month period in 1939 we exported fresh fruits valued at $9,167,000 as compared to $18,662,000 in 1938.

The reciprocal trade agreement program is inconsistent with the farm program now being administered by the Department of Agriculture. Congress has enacted legislation which provides for parity payments for agricultural products and it is my firm opinion that we will not have national prosperity in this country until agriculture receives parity prices for its products, or a fair and just share of the national income. I do not see how it will be possible for agriculture to receive either of these under the reciprocal trade agreement program. The Department of Agriculture, through the Federal Surplus Commodity Corporation, is engaged in the removal of surplus farm commodities while on the other hand the State Department, through the reciprocal-trade agreements, is reducing the import duties on the very commodities that the Department of Agriculture is distributing. During the fiscal years of 1938 and 1939 the Surplus Commodities Corporation purchased 20 different commodities and distributed them through the relief agencies of the United States. The total value of these commodities was $30,479,112. During this same period there was imported into the United States $92,298,000 worth of the same commodities. It is interesting to note that import duties were reduced on these very items through reciprocal-trade treaties. How can the farmer ever expect to secure parity under those conditions? I ask, How long should the Federal Treasury purchase these commodities by direct appropriation and then encourage their imports by trade treaties? Following is a table showing the amount of Federal surplus commodities and imports of the same for the fiscal years 1938 and 1939.

The primary purpose of the original Trade Treaty Act was to seek and regain the markets for agricultural products and for industrial products as well. It is my contention that it has failed in the first and that the longer we continue it as it is being presently administered the more agriculture will suffer. At present our Nation has reciprocal-trade treaties with all of the leading industrial nations with which it has been possible to negotiate them, and this means that further negotiations must be held and further treaties must be made with nations which are in direct competition with the American farmer. This means that future treaties will further displace the American farmer's market. I think it is generally agreed that had it not been for the strenuous objections of the agricultural sections that we would today have a treaty with Argentina, Chile, and Uruguay. The State Department says that the negotiations with Argentina are terminated. Most of us believe they would not have been terminated except for extreme pressure from the farm sections. Therefore, is it not reasonable to presume that negotiations will be entered into if the trade-treaty extension is granted? Reports from Argentina indicated that they are expecting a revival of the negotiations at a near future date.

During the past 5 years 166 strictly farm tariffs have been reduced by as much as 50 percent. The farmers of this Nation should not be forced to meet the competition of cheap land and cheap labor by the importation of competitive farm products.

It is interesting to note that the President, during his 1932 campaign, made a statement to the farmers of the Nation, which they accepted as his attitude on tariff reductions for agriculture. His statement was:

I know of no effective excessively high tariff duties on farm products. I do not intend that such duties shall be lowered.

How can anyone justify the 166 reductions that have already been made when practically every agricultural commodity is below parity price and many of them only 50 to 60 percent of parity? The national farm organizations of the United States have made a thorough study of the trade-treaty program and are greatly concerned about its effect.

The National Grange, in its recent annual convention in Peoria, Ill., opposed extension of the Trade Treaty Act with the following resolution:

The reciprocal trade agreements program has caused serious damage to American agriculture. It has depressed farm prices by encouraging imports of competitive products from countries where substandard labor conditions prevail. It is wrong in principle and violates the Constitution. It should not be renewed when it expires by its own limitations on June 12, 1940.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON. Not now.

The American Farm Bureau Federation, which has been reported as being in favor of continuance of the program, qualified their resolution in such a way that no trade agreements would be entered into with competitive farm commodities unless they were assured a parity price level. They further urged that the act be so amended as to provide that no agreement should be consummated unless it is unanimously approved by the Secretaries of State, Commerce, and Agriculture. Evidently they believe, as most individual farmers believe, that agriculture has no friends in the State Department. How can they believe otherwise when the State Department opposes the payment of subsidy for the export of farm commodities? In my opinion this surplus crop removal program has given the farmer a greater direct benefit than any or all of the reciprocal-trade agreements. Following is the resolution adopted by the American Farm Bureau Federation at its annual convention in Chicago:

In giving our support to the continuance of reciprocal-trade agreements, we renew, with increased emphasis, our demand that no agreement be consummated, the effect of which might be to force or hold domestic prices for any farm commodity below parity level. Any other course would justify the condemnation of and opposition to such agreement by all agricultural groups.

We further insist that in the negotiation of trade agreements economic factors be given consideration equivalent to the weight accorded to the factors of diplomacy and statecraft. To this end we urge that the Reciprocal Trade Act be amended to provide that no agreement be consummated unless unanimously approved by the Secretaries of State, Commerce, and Agriculture.

Before concluding I want to briefly discuss the peace aspects of the trade-treaty program and the farmer. There is no group of citizens in the United States that is more concerned about maintaining our peace and our neutrality than the farmer. His close touch with nature itself makes it natural for him to favor not only domestic harmony but also peace for the entire world. He is willing to sacrifice, if necessary, for this cause. On the other hand, I do not believe that he should be expected to pay the price that the trade-treaty program is exacting for an illusory peace. The trade treaty may have for its altruistic purpose the establishment of world peace through the reduction in trade tariffs. It may be a worthy purpose, but when we adopt it we must keep in mind that in so doing we must also accept the living conditions, wage standards, and competition of the peasants who produce competitive farm products. I for one do not believe it would justify the cost. Practically the entire world is embroiled in war, and most all of the late wars have been declared since the trade-treaty program was enacted in 1934. This is positive proof to me that we should not base our peace hopes on the trade-treaty program. We are dealing with the other nations of the world which are forced to adopt hard, realistic principles of trade, and I do not believe we can expect them to be swayed by gratuities in the form of tariff reductions. We are dealing with shrewd international traders and if we are not to lose our best market—namely, the American market—we must approach this subject from the same basis.

Mr. Chairman, I want to urge that no reduction be permitted on foreign farm products when the price of the competitive American product is below parity. Let us give the American farmer the benefit of the American market.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Michigan yield to me for a moment or two?

Mr. DINGELL. Certainly.

Mr. BUCK. To correct the Record. I failed to obtain consent of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON] to make an interrogatory on the question of the purchase of Federal surplus commodity goods. He read a portion of the minority report in which he referred to a list of 20 commodities on which the tariffs had been reduced, amounting to $30,000,000, while in the same period there were imported into the United States $92,000,000 of those same commodities.

The question of purchases by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation is certainly one which demands more attention than the minority spent upon it, although they say that, "Perhaps the most preposterous conflict between the trade-treaty program and the farm program." The reason for the minority not continuing with the analysis of this question is undoubtedly due to the fact that their argument loses all its validity when the details are examined. Let us look at some of these details.

The minority states that—

During the fiscal years 1938 and 1939 there was spent on surplus removal operations in these commodities (20 commodities on which tariffs have been reduced under trade treaties) $30,479,112, while during the same period there were imported into the United States $92,298,000 worth of these same commodities from abroad. Presumably if the import duties on these commodities had not been reduced, a large part of the money spent out of the Treasury for surplus removal operations could have been saved.

Now, let us see what makes up these totals. Nearly eighty-four million, or over 90 percent of the ninety-two millions worth of imports, were of two items: Cheese, $23,584,000, and fish, $60,259,000. The Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation spent only $741,177 on purchases of these two items. If there had been a complete embargo on fish and cheese, 90 percent of the imports of 20 commodities mentioned would have been kept out. Only 2.5 percent of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation purchases presumably would have been averted, although purchases of both products were due to temporary emergency conditions during the fiscal year 1937-38 and were not repeated in the fiscal year 1938-39.

Now, let us see what makes up the total of $30,479,112 of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation purchases. The largest purchases were of apples $4,978,816, white or Irish potatoes $4,286,457, and fluid milk $4,229,949, a total of $13,495,222. Imports of these three products totaled only $1,539,000, or a little over 10 percent of Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation purchases of them. But now for the joker: $1,342,000 worth of the potato imports were of certified seed potatoes, and the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation bought no certified seed potatoes. Therefore, the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation expenditure of $13,495,222 on apples, potatoes, and milk could not, by any stretch of the imagination, be reduced by more than $197,000, or less than 1 percent, if imports of these three products had been kept out. Now, at the same time we were importing $197,000 worth of these products we were exporting $32,995,000 of them, or more than Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation's combined purchases of all 20 products. Surely the minority would grant that the trade-agreements program which seeks to safeguard in benefiting more than $32,995,000 worth of our export trade in these three commodities was not greatly increasing the new surplus by allowing $197,000 worth of imports to trickle in.

The only other commodities of which Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation purchases amounted to more than a million dollars are rice, wheat cereal, raisins, canned peas, grapefruit, cabbage, and eggs. Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation purchases of these seven commodities totaled $14,147,465 in the 2 fiscal years. Imports amounted to only $2,820,000, but exports, which were greater than imports for every one of these products, were more than twice as great as imports and Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation purchases combined, being valued at $38,802,000. Of the total of $2,820,000 worth of these imports, broken rice accounted for $2,294,000, or more than 80 percent. The only duty reduction on rice was that granted in the agreement with the Netherlands on finely screened broken rice, known as brewer's rice. It is but little used for human food. The rice purchased by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation could not have been substituted for the imported product on which a reduction in duty was granted except at a prohibitive price. The only concession on grapes was a binding of the duty on hothouse grapes, a luxury product. Canned peas also fall into the luxury category. The duty reduction on fresh grapefruit is limited to 2 months of the year before our marketing season begins, and the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation made no purchases during these months. Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation likewise made no purchases of wheat cereal of a type on which the duty reduction was made. The raisins on which a duty reduction was granted of a special type imported for the bakery industry. United States imports are insignificant when compared with exports or domestic production of raisins. In the 2 fiscal years 1938 and 1939 our exports were valued at more than $15,000,000 while imports were valued at only $92,000. Exports of eggs also greatly exceeded imports. No reductions were made on wool, corn, cotton, fresh beef, or wheat for human consumption.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as I have a 40-minute speech to deliver in 30 minutes, I will not be able to yield until I shall have concluded my remarks.

Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as I come from the great industrial and automobile-producing State of Michigan, and particularly because I reside in and represent a substantial district within the capital of the Nation's automobile industry, there will be very little surprise among the Members of the House when it is known that I am enthusiastically and wholeheartedly for the bill before the Committee, which provides for the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act.

I am not, however, provincial or chauvinistic enough to support the bill just because the administration proposes it or because the benefits affect alone the auto industry. If the benefits accruing to the auto industry were centered within and confined solely to manufacturers and workers engaged in the production of automobiles and to the exclusion from benefit of all others, or if such benefits were gained at the expense or sacrifice of the other industries and farmers, I could well find myself on the side of the opposition. The automobile industry is America's No. 1 industry. It is centered in the greatest and most intensely industrialized area in the world. At all times the production of automobiles is a gage of the prosperity of our Nation. In depression we all look to its early revival of activity leading to prosperity. In prosperous times we all look to it as a stimulant and stabilizer of our economy. This great industrial giant touches and affects everything and everybody. The products of the farm, the mine, mill, smelter, and manufacturer in every city, county, and State of the Union are dependent upon it for a very substantial outlet; nor are the producers of commodities alone the beneficiaries of automobile production. Finance, sales, and service business rises or falls with this industrial marvel.

I have repeatedly been reminded that the American farmer is the biggest proportionate buyer of the automobile output, and that is to be conceded without any argument from me; but I want to remind those who advance this line of reasoning in opposition to the extension of the trade agreements that the best customer of the American farmer is the worker in the great industrial producing centers of the Nation. And, taking the ratio of farm and urban population as a basis for the comparison as to who is the best customer for the other, we will find that the argument and comparison favors the urban customer in the ratio of about 3 to 1.

We are all of one mind in saying that the American market for the farmer and the industrial worker is the most important and the one to protect and enlarge upon, and that is what the administration is trying to do through trade agreements. The farmer cares not if he sells his grain, hogs, cattle, beans, or furs as an export. What he wants to do is to sell his products to somebody. If an agreement can be made that will stimulate the automobile manufacturer and our industries to rise to great heights of production, the surplus of farm products will go into the stomachs of our factory workers, who will pay in hard, cold-rolled American dollars for what they buy. Our American workers are the best eaters—yes; by comparison they are the epicures among the workers of the world.

A splendid and well-qualified witness in the person of R. W. Gifford, chairman of the foreign trade committee of the Detroit Board of Commerce, appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means and made a most powerful and lucid statement in behalf of the trade agreements. His testimony is not only forceful, but unimpeachable because of its thoroughness and fairness to all concerned. He treats and gives full consideration to the farmer equity in the proposed legislation. I refer you to his testimony on page 1534 of the printed hearings. It is well worth reading.

It is not my purpose to repeat again the overwhelming evidence presented at those hearings which reaffirm my belief in the desirability of continuing this legislation. Other members of this Committee already have reviewed the major features of the testimony and I will touch upon them only insofar as they bear upon the questions to which I address myself.

As pointed out by the spokesman for the Detroit Board of Commerce in the statement before the committee, probably no area in the country has more real interest in the success of the trade-agreements program than Detroit and Michigan. That foreign trade is important to us is indicated by the fact that the Detroit industrial area is the largest producer of manufactured goods for exportation in the United States. According to testimony, about 800 plants in Michigan are engaged in exports. Six hundred of these plants are listed in the hearings. I will not bore you with the reading of this list, but I desire, nevertheless, to insert the names of these companies and their locations in the RECORD. I will also put into the RECORD three brief, though important, tables.

⁴ Estimate.

Mr. GIFFORD. In addition to that chart, I have a list for the record, in case it may be questioned, of the 600 Michigan plants who are actively engaged in the export business, and incidentally I think that that can be increased another couple of hundred because they did not even have us on the list, and we have about five factories in the State of Michigan. So, judging from that fact, I think that there are probably many others.

Mr. COOPER. You can submit that also.
(The list is as follows:)

One out of every $7 spent in this industrialized area is derived from foreign trade.

Although Michigan derives the major portion of its wealth from its highly industrialized production, agriculture also is important in the State's total economy. Canned fruits and vegetables produced by Michigan farmers find important outlets abroad. The Michigan farmer has a stake in the international trade, not only to the extent that his own production moves directly into foreign trade, but also to the extent that the goods made for export by industry provide its workers with the purchasing power which is so essential to the farmers' market.

Michigan's agricultural industry is a large contributing factor in Michigan's total economy. Our agricultural production is greatly diversified, consisting chiefly of grain, livestock, fruits, dried beans, vegetables, and dairy products. To be sure, only the canned fruits and vegetables move into the export trade, but Detroit, a city which is so largely dependent upon exports, alone absorbs nearly half of the Michigan farmers' produce. In this connection, I should like to refer to several of the statements made by Mr. Gifford, who said to the committee:

As near as I can tell, I am the only person who has appeared before this committee as yet who has been actively on the firing line in the export business. In the last 30 years, since I started on my first trip abroad, I have spent 18 of those years living in foreign countries. I have covered all parts of the world many times except the Far East, and the war stopped that. There have been many questions and many statements made that I think could have been answered and answered quickly and easily by someone who is in the export business.

I have listened here for several days to the discussions, and frankly most of it seems to me to be entirely theoretical. It is being approached from an academic angle as to the theory of the export business. Actually, I think, if these same men, had to get out and try and sell merchandise in the foreign market they would take a different slant. I have heard the argument made yesterday, I think by an eminent writer, Mr. Peek, that there seemed to be any number of ways in which this could be handled. At one time apparently in his book he felt that it ought to be put in the hands of a committee of responsible citizens.

Mr. WOODRUFF. He still believes that.

Mr. GIFFORD. I would like to know what a group of responsible citizens would be, unless he picked them himself. If I pick them

I would believe that they would be responsible. At the present time he says that the present bunch are not responsible. Maybe they are not, but my experience with them has sold me and has sold a good many manufacturers on the fact that they are serious and conscientious in handling it.

I can think of no testimony which we heard which so adequately answers all the criticism of the opposition as does the statement by this witness. Mr. Gifford went on to give us page, sentence, paragraph, and verse of his experience and that of innumerable other manufacturers with the operation of this program not only as it applies to exports but also as it affects imports into the United States.

I am convinced that the trade-agreements program has been a great benefit to the automotive industry and, since the manufacture of automobiles affects the economy of every State, every county, every city, and every hamlet in our Nation, I am sure that the benefit which the trade-agreements program has brought to that great industry has spread its blessing throughout all phases of our economic life.

I am also equally convinced that the operations of this program have not injured any segment of our farm or industrial life. To be sure, the operation of this program may have resulted in occasional hardships or temporary dislocation for isolated groups here and there; but I feel certain that once the momentary difficulty of the adjustment necessitated by tariff change is passed that these people will reap and have had benefits far greater than that which they could have enjoyed had the status quo been maintained.

Let us examine for a moment the importance of the foreign market to the American auto industry. In normal times 10 percent to 15 percent of the automobiles produced in the United States are sold abroad. In proportion to the total production, foreign outlets are much more important to the manufacturers of trucks, who sell upward of 25 percent of their output outside the United States, as compared with the 10 percent to 15 percent sold by the makers of passenger vehicles.

In 1929, the peak year of automotive exports, $539,300,000 of American automobiles were sold abroad. By 1933 this had dropped to the disastrously low figure of $90,600,000. In the years in which we have seen the trade-agreements program in operation automobile exports have steadily climbed and in 1937 reached the high level of $346,900,000. Although 1939 was not as good a year as 1937, it none the less accounted for exports valued at $253,700,000.

I have already inserted in the committee hearings a list of the concessions which have been obtained for the automobile manufacturer and the exports under these concessions in 1937. I will not bore you with a repetition of this list, but I do want to point out to you that 19 of the 20 trade agreements now in effect cover automotive products and that in 1937 these concessions applied to some 90 percent of all of the exports in that year. The indirect effect of this upon our national economy can be best visualized if we examine the proportion of the national consumption of our leading raw materials which go into the making of automobiles.

The automotive industry in 1938 consumed the following proportion of total United States consumption:

In addition, the automobile industry was the principal consumer of the following materials which, although not directly produced in the United States, nonetheless provide a substantial amount of industry and employment here:

	Percent

The relative importance of the automotive industry as a factor in our broad national economy can best be demonstrated by reference to the industry's employment and pay roll. In the year which most of us think of as the peak—1929—the automotive industry employed 448,000 workers and paid them $14,682,000 per week. In the peak year of the industry—which was 1937, incidentally—employment averaged 517,000 workers, and their weekly pay roll was $15,659,000. Figures for 1939 are not yet available, but the indications are that they will closely approach the 1937 level.

Again I repeat that I would not support the trade-agreements program if it had been a benefit only to the automotive industry, because I realize that, even though the automobile industry is important to this country, it is still but one part of the economy affecting the well-being of these United States. In this respect it is interesting to note the position taken by the Automobile Manufacturers' Association. In their statement before the committee they said:

We are not only concerned, however, with the effect of this act on our foreign business. Between 85 and 90 percent of the cars and trucks made in this country are sold here, and between 10 and 15 percent are exported.

We would not endorse trade agreements if it were thought they jeopardized or adversely affected the home market, where such a preponderance of our production is sold. During recent weeks fear has been expressed by some opposed to this act that increased imports will be harmful to the welfare of the American farmer. We do not share this belief. As a group, the farmers of this country are our best customers, and we are certainly mindful of those who buy such a large share of our products. To the contrary, we believe that the duty reductions that have been made have had no serious effect on the agricultural industry, while increased exports have widened the market for farm products.

Nothing has strengthened me in my support of this program so much as the failure of the opposition to demonstrate any adequate basis for their complaint. Let me touch briefly upon three subjects which have been the cause of much of the vocal criticism of the program and to point out a few of the most obvious weaknesses of these arguments. The subjects to which I refer are cattle, silver fox furs, and beans.

There has been much wailing and complaining about the injuries sustained by the cattle producers and to hear some of the testimony you would think the situation is hopeless. I am not an expert but I know an expert when I see and hear one. This House has among its Members several cattlemen, none more able or qualified to speak for these producers than our colleague from Oklahoma, PHIL FERGUSON. I am willing to rest my case on his testimony. Let us see what he has to say about the matter:

Any informed cattleman knows that the industry has not suffered due to the reciprocal-trade treaties. The figures reported by Mr. GEARHART are a sample of the misinformation that has gone out to the country; 57,000 cattle imported in 1934, and he compares that with some six or seven hundred thousand imported in 1939.

I can say to the committee that if the domestic price of cattle had been the same in 1939 that it was in 1934 there would have been no increase in imports. They simply could not have paid the existing tariff under the reciprocal-trade treaties and come into this country. We still have a very effective protective tariff on cattle.

I might add that the cattle industry has been so much harmed by the imports of cattle under trade agreements that it is the only item among our agriculture products which is now enjoying parity prices, while other segments of our farm production on which rates have not been reduced by trade agreements are only able to yield some 75 percent or less of their parity price.

Because it is a matter of primary importance to the farmers of my State and because Michigan is the largest producer in the country, I would like to devote a moment or two to the question of dried beans. Let me say first, that dried beans have not been included in any trade agreements but the commodity was one of those listed for consideration in the proposal for a trade agreement with Chile.

Let me say first that from what I have seen of the operation of the trade-agreements procedure and from the information submitted by witnesses at our hearings, I am convinced that if there was any likelihood that a reduction in the rate of duty on dried beans would harm our farmers, that no such reduction would be made. I will nonetheless cite a few pertinent factors affecting any consideration bearing upon the commodity.

Production of beans in the United States has increased steadily in recent years. Production which ranged from nine to eleven million bags a year in the early twenties, increased to ten to twelve million bags per annum in the latter part of the decade, and since 1930 has ranged from eleven to fifteen and one-half million bags a year. Production which amounted to 11.4 million in 1936 jumped to 14.6 million in 1937 and was followed by the second largest crop on record in 1938, of 15.3 million bags. The estimated production for 1939 was 14,000,000 bags. Imports have ranged from less than 1 to 3 percent of domestic production. Although exports have usually been much less than 1 percent of domestic production, in 1938 exports actually exceeded imports. The present drag on the bean market is centered in the 3,500,000-bag surplus. The testimony relating to beans as advanced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] does not stand up, it is not worth the printing space in the RECORD. He was equally as forceful and trustworthy when he argued about imports of cabbage even after he added sauerkraut.

We have heard frequent references to the existence of a large surplus of beans, with an attempt to establish by implication that this results from excess importations. I need not discuss the fallacy of such statements. The figures themselves adequately demonstrate that if there is any surplus, it cannot be due to imports, but is directly the result of the increased production and successive bumper crops produced by our own farmers.

The present duty on beans is 3 cents per pound, or $3 per bag. Insurance, commissions, and other expenses add about $1 a bag to the cost of foreign beans landed in the United States. Thus, even if beans were obtained gratuitously abroad, the price in the United States would have to be more than $4 per hundredweight before it would pay anyone to bring them into this country. In the brief against any reduction in the rate of duty on beans which was submitted by the Michigan Bean Growers and introduced into the RECORD by my colleague from Michigan, Mr. WOODRUFF, the farm prices shown have been $4 and more in only two of the last 10 years. In 1937, 1938, and 1939, the prices have averaged $2.50 per hundred and less. Even with the impetus given commodity prices by the outbreak of the present hostilities in Europe, the highest price for beans reached on September 15, 1939, was but $3.50 per hundred.

I am wondering how at these prices beans, which must bear shipping and other handling expenses of $1 per hundred plus a duty of $3 per hundred, or even if the duty were reduced by the full 50 percent allowed by the law, $1.50 per hundred, how anyone thinks that foreign beans could be brought into this country and sold at prices which would be competitive to our farmers.

The implication advanced by those who would abrogate trade agreements that bean prices were affected by the mere fact that they were listed for consideration with another nation or that the relatively unimportant concession made to Cuba on fresh lima beans and imported in December through May is entirely groundless. Anyone who can do a little simple arithmetic can see how absurd it would be to anticipate imports of dried beans unless the prices were so high in this market that they not only attracted imports, but also brought great satisfaction to the bean producers of the United States.

The overwhelming weight of the evidence offered before the committee is in favor of the continuance of the policy of trade agreements and the extension of the act. The opposition failed to make out a case, not because of the lack of ability on the part of those who appeared, but because there was an insufficiency of substance to sustain their position. The sentiment of the people throughout the Nation, and they are well informed, make you no mistake about that, is in line with the preponderance of the evidence and for the extension of the act.

Some of the testimony in opposition was painfully strained, twisted, and stretched. In one instance as regards furs, in spite of the endorsement given by the accredited and well-informed spokesman for the fox and fur producers, adverse testimony predicated upon bias and misrepresentation was given the committee, which, when analyzed, proved to be stretched to the sixth dimension of baselessness.

Let me quote briefly from the statement of Maurice Fitzsimmons, the spokesman for 90 percent of the fur producers of America, let us see what he has to say about the trade-agreement policy:

We feel rather keenly in the fur industry about this reciprocal trade agreement program because the industry, starting with the outbreak of the European war, was threatened with a very serious crisis.

Our breeders were going to go broke if they continued producing silver fox and if all of the European pelts were dumped into this country.

A tariff would not help us one iota. * * * In a case like that silver-fox furs might be worth $2 or $3 in the European market * * * a 50-percent or 100-percent tariff would mean nothing on that when we have a cost of production in America, as I said before, of about $26 to $28 per pelt.

Finally, we turned to the reciprocal-trade agreements, and there we found a cooperative group of men * * * we sat around the table and discussed with them as to what would be the logical way out; and that through the power of the elasticity of the trade agreements were able to enact a quota.

Now to me that is important and it seems to me imperative that you continue on the statute books of these United States an elastic trade law that can meet emergencies. * * *

I hope that you are going to continue to have that type of law on the statute books of these United States so that we can continue to go ahead with confidence.

We had another sale in January, at which time the price was up 43 percent over December levels, and we had a 95-percent sale. I think that in itself shows what happened to the fur trade, to the fur buyers, and to the producers, as a result of this quota that was set up through the reciprocal trade agreement program.

When the country was for the greater part agricultural, to that extent we were dependent upon the farmer for prosperity. Now that the United States is three-fourths or more industrial, the reverse is true. The farm producer at no time in recent years lost the major part of his export market and always retained unimpaired the home market with perhaps a slight fluctuation. Certainly that is true as it applies to the major commodities, such as cattle, hogs, sheep, corn, wheat, rye, and other grains, as well as fruits, vegetables, and dairy products. In these and many other instances, the American market has been invulnerable to foreign penetration and has been held to our farmers to the extent of 95 to 99½ percent.

Manufacturing industries fared perhaps as well in the home market, but the export markets have in many instances fallen off as high as 90 percent of previous exports. That is what hurt the American farmer and his business. When you cripple industry with its vast buying power, the suffering affects not alone the industries, but also the farmer and the whole Nation.

Remember, always, America today is three-fourths or more industrial, urban, and one-fourth or less rural and agricultural. If the farm producer retains 90 percent or more of his valuable home market and industry loses a great percentage of its foreign market, is it not reasonable to assume that a prop for industry will be a prop for the farmer? I sincerely believe that is the case.

What I tried to show here, Mr. Chairman, is that the trade agreements are of much benefit to all the people and to all lines of business in every State in the Union, including the manufacturer, the farmer, the merchant, the banker, and the rail- and steamship-transportation operators; and that not only were the industries and farm producers for whom concessions were obtained under the act directly benefited but through them, as for example through the auto industry, many other producers in the city and the farm reaped indirect benefits.

The evidence proves conclusively that prosperity in the auto industry resulting from trade agreements contributes to the prosperity of the farmer whether he produces hogs, cattle, grain, or even silver-fox furs. Our auto workers when employed eat well, dress well, and even buy silver-fox furs for their wives and daughters.

I believe I made it clear, too, that the stimulating effect of the concessions obtained for farmers and fruit growers has been felt by the manufacturers and particularly the automobile manufacturers.

I hope I may have contributed in a small measure something of value toward convincing some of the Members regarding the soundness of the trade agreements as an economical instrumentality which is really workable and ought to be continued. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Houston].

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, the noted economist Mr. Roger W. Babson recently declared:

The reciprocal-trade program has been a truly bright spot of the New Deal. In his quiet but firm way Secretary Hull has fought harder for peace in this decade than any other man alive. He is a tower of strength, vision, and unselfishness. His program has increased our exports to countries with whom we have completed agreements by 60 percent, while our exports to those countries with which we have not bargained have expanded less than 40 percent. Moreover, our imports from treaty nations have not increased any faster than with nontreaty nations. This, in a nutshell, tells the effectiveness of the program, its aid to jobs and industry.

Mr. Babson wrote other words of wisdom, as follows:

The G. O. P. needs campaign ammunition and they will make the most of decrying these trade pacts. They claim, for instance, that the program permits an excessive influx of farm products—$800,000,000 worth in 1939. But Secretary Hull points out that $530,000,000 of this was coffee, rubber, silk, cocoa, bananas, which have always been admitted duty-free.

And again in the statement:

The importance of world trade has never been fully realized by most people. Foreign commerce is the keystone of world prosperity and peace. Our overseas markets in good times absorbed only 10 percent of our total output, but that 10 percent was a vital 10 percent. Half of our cotton crop, for instance, was sold abroad. Think of the importance of cotton to United States prosperity.

And in defense of Secretary Hull, he wrote:

Secretary Hull (a former Senator) knew that the only way to lower tariffs and increase employment as a whole would be a reduction program which excused constituent-conscious Congressmen from voting to ratify it. Hence, the State Department's trade program came into being.

To separate foreign trade from politics—

Ran an editorial in the Star Free Press (independent), Ventura, Calif.—

Shades of Willis Hawley and Reed Smoot. If ever politics sired a vampire to suck the lifeblood out of our foreign trade, the Hawley-Smoot tariff of 1930 was it. The Hull program, far from being bound up in politics, was designed to rid our foreign trade of the curse of politically logrolled tariff barriers behind which our commerce had languished. Many of the roots of the present war are traceable to the tariff walls which crisscrossed post-Versailles Europe. If we retreat to Hawley-Smootism, as Senators McNARY, CAPPER, and others seem to desire, we may very well be putting down the roots of our participation in this or another war. It would mean crawling into the shell of economic nationalism, with everything that phrase implies in lowered living standards, regimentation of agriculture and industry, and international animosity. * * * Conceivably there have been inequities involving particular farm products, and if so the farmer is justified in seeking redress. But if he has a vivid recollection of the early 1930's—as what farmer has not—surely he will hesitate before being sold that bill of shoddy goods again.

Senator CAPPER is reported to have once said in the Senate:

Our experience in writing tariff legislation has been discouraging. Trading between groups and sections is inevitable. Logrolling is inevitable, and in most pernicious form. We do not write a national tariff law. We join together through various unholy alliances and combinations a potpourri of hodgepodge, sectional and local tariff rates which often add to our troubles and increase world misery.

Now he wants to go back to it.

But reciprocal-trade agreements negotiated under the Trade Agreements Act of 1934 have, beyond doubt, been of advantage to the State of Kansas and to agriculture, the principal industry of the State. Renewal of the authority of the President to negotiate these agreements offers further valuable benefits. Failure to renew this authorization, on the other hand, means definite and serious loss and danger to the interests of Kansas, both farmers and others.

While important reductions in foreign barriers against exports of commodities grown on Kansas farms have been obtained through the agreements, these reductions are not the only, or perhaps even the most important, advantages of the program to Kansas. Nevertheless it is a fact that through trade agreements, 11 countries have reduced their barriers against American wheat and wheat flour. Great Britain removed, entirely, her preferential tariff of 6 cents a bushel on American wheat, and Canada reduced her duty. Nine other countries made concessions of various sorts on these products.

Kansas corn-hog farmers have had their export markets for pork products and lard improved by agreements with 17 countries, including our most important foreign customers for these products. These concessions cover all forms of hog products—lard, hams, bacon, and fresh and frozen pork—and beef and veal. They have helped to sustain and enlarge foreign markets for American meat products and have provided jobs for men in Kansas packing plants and on Kansas railroads.

Many factors other than trade agreements have influenced our international trade since the Trade Agreements Act was passed, and no statistical analysis can show exactly and conclusively, commodity by commodity and agreement by agreement, just what part each trade agreement has played. There have been wars and preparations for war, droughts and bumper crops, fluctuations in industrial and business activity, both in this country and abroad. They have all had their effects. But plain common sense shows that when foreign restrictions on exports of American products are reduced or removed, the foreign market for these products is better than it would have been if the trade-agreements program had not removed the obstacles.

Notwithstanding the powerful adverse factors that have been operating, and the difficulty of determining exactly the direct effect of trade agreements, there is plenty of statistical evidence to show that the agreements have been enlarging and supporting United States foreign trade. Between the fiscal year ended June 30, 1936, and that ended June 30, 1939, United States exports of all commodities to trade-agreement countries increased more than two and one-half times as much as did exports to nonagreement countries.

In that period, United States exports of farm products to trade-agreement countries increased 15 percent, while exports of farm products to nonagreement countries declined 19 percent. United States imports of all commodities from trade-agreement countries declined, in the years under comparison, by 2 percent; imports from nonagreement countries declined four times as much.

Nor have the advantages of foreign concessions on American exports been limited, as far as Kansas is concerned, to those on exports of farm products. Kansas grows crops and produces livestock to feed Americans as well as to feed foreigners. Increased exports of American industrial goods—automobiles, machinery, iron and steel products, typewriters, and dozens of other nonagricultural products on which concessions have been obtained through the trade agreements—mean more American industrial workers with money to buy beef, pork, dairy products, and many other things which come from the soil of Kansas. Not the least important customers of the Kansas farmer are railroad workers, of whom there are thousands in Kansas. It is sufficiently obvious that goods moving in either interstate or international trade mean more freight traffic and more men on railroad pay rolls able to buy the products of Kansas farms.

In return for the concessions that have been obtained for American exports, including those produced in Kansas, the United States has made adjustments in its own tariffs on certain products imported from other countries. It is an all-too-prevalent delusion that every such an adjustment is harmful to Americans and deprives American producers of some share of their domestic market. Tariff reductions under the trade-agreements program are made only after the most careful study by men from the Tariff Commission and from the Departments of Agriculture, Commerce, and State to determine that they will not be harmful to American producers. When necessary these reductions are hedged about with safeguards and restrictions to prevent their resulting in depressed prices to American producers.

The trade-agreements program has not deprived the American farmer of any of his share of the domestic market for farm goods which he can produce, nor has it lowered his prices and income from products on which tariffs have been reduced. In 1929, when farm cash income in the United States was up to eleven and one-fourth billion dollars, the American farmer supplied 90 percent of the domestic market for farm products. In 1933, the last full year before the inauguration of the trade-agreements program, he supplied 93 percent of that market, but received a cash income of only five and one-fourth billion dollars. In 1938 he still supplied 93 percent of the domestic market and received a cash income of nearly seven and three-fourths billion dollars.

His share of the domestic market is not so important to the American farmer as how big and how profitable to him that market is, and how much income he gets from supplying it. Because the trade-agreements program stimulates industrial, transportation, and business activity in the United States, it helps to make the American home market bigger and better for the American farmer.

Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace stated to the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives on January 12:

I do not know of a single case in which such duty reductions have seriously inconvenienced any American agricultural industry. As a matter of fact, in cases where a damaging influx of agricultural products might take place as a result of duty reductions, meticulous care has been taken to see that safeguards were introduced to prevent such an influx.

The Secretary of Agriculture cited as an example the imports of beef cattle under concessions granted by the United States in the trade agreement with Canada. This concession has been frequently and untruthfully described as a threat to the American cattle industry.

The facts are that the concession applies to only two classes of beef cattle, those weighing 700 pounds or more each, and those weighing 200 pounds or less each. Furthermore, the tariff reduction under the agreement is limited by quotas. Not more than 225,000 head of beef cattle weighing over 700 pounds each—slightly over 1 percent of the average annual slaughter of cattle and calves in the United States—can be admitted to this country under reduced duty in any one calendar year, and not more than 60,000 in any one 3-month period. The reduced duty on calves applies to not more than 100,000 head per year. On beef cattle weighing more than 200 but less than 700 pounds each there has been no reduction of the 1930 tariff rate of 3 cents a pound. And this class of cattle made up 54 percent of all the beef cattle imported into the United States in 1939.

Imports of beef cattle into the United States in 1939 were 328,388 head greater than imports in 1938, but nearly half of the total increase was in cattle of a class on which the duty had not been reduced; and, in addition, 22,674 head of cattle falling in the classes on which duties have been reduced, paid the full 1930 tariff because of the tariff-quota restrictions in the Canadian agreement.

Kansas cattlemen, and producers of other things as well, who have been told that their industries would be threatened by huge influxes of imported meat products as a result of tariff reductions through trade agreements, should recall that very recently negotiations for agreements with Argentina and with Uruguay were terminated because the negotiators for this country were unwilling to grant the provisions which might have made possible such an influx. They insisted upon qualifications, quotas, and restrictions for the protection of American meat producers. Both those proposed agreements were of extreme importance from the viewpoint of international politics in the present crisis. But the United States Government refused to "sell American cattlemen and farmers down the river" in order to put them into effect.

The real clinching evidence on whether the concessions on cattle in the Canadian trade agreement have damaged the interests of American cattle producers is the fact that the average farm price received by American farmers for beef cattle in 1939 averaged $6.87 a hundred pounds against $6.28 in 1938. The farm price of beef cattle in the United States has been above parity every month in 1939, and in part because the trade-agreements program has stimulated industrial activity in the United States and enabled American workmen to buy more beef.

There have been equally misleading statements about increased imports of wheat into the United States in 1939 as compared with 1938. The fact is that no United States tariff on wheat fit for human consumption has been lowered under any trade agreement. The only wheat tariff that has been lowered is that on wheat unfit for human consumption, wheat that American farmers import to feed to their livestock. Imports of wheat into the United States for milling in bond and reexport—making jobs for Americans in mills and on railroads—increased in 1939 over 1938 by some 6,000,000 bushels, and made up almost the entire importation in both 1938 and 1939. No flour from that wheat entered the United States market.

Wheat imported into the United States for human consumption here—about 215,000 bushels in 1939—all pays the full 1930 tariff rate of 42 cents a bushel. These imports in 1939 amounted to about three one-hundredths of 1 percent of the United States wheat production and about three-tenths of 1 percent of United States wheat exports in the same year. Efforts to make these figures show a flood of competitive imported wheat would be ridiculous even if the imports had received any duty reduction, which they have not.

Kansas farmers, like those of other States, are keenly aware of the disparity between the prices they receive for the things they sell, and the prices they must pay for the things they buy on a tariff-protected market. The trade-agreements program is one of the most effective of the measures which this Government is taking to correct that disparity. Through the trade agreements, this country has reduced its tariffs on scores of articles that farmers buy, offsetting at least in part the monopolistic advantage which the tariff has long given to industry in the United States.

According to a recent estimate by the Department of Agriculture, based upon 1935 statistics, tariff duties on products the farmer consumes, if fully effective in raising prices on those articles, would have cost American farmers in that year $681,000,000, or $108 for each farm family.

In 1933 the ratio of prices received by farmers in the United States to the prices they paid, was 64 to 100 against the farmer. In 1939 this ratio was only 77 to 100. In 1933 farm cash income in Kansas was $152,000,000 and in 1939 it was $241,000,000, a gain of 58 percent. Kansas farmers contrast these trends upward in income and prices with the steep downward trends in the 4 years 1930-33 under the Hawley-Smoot tariff policy.

Under the trade-agreements program, the United States has reduced tariffs on more industrial imports than agricultural imports, contrary to a frequent misstatement. On the other hand, the trade agreements have yielded to the United States concessions on a greater proportion of our agricultural than of our industrial exports. The statistics stand for themselves as an answer to the charge that under this program the American farmer has been "sold down the river for the benefit of the manufacturer."

It is true that world economic conditions have changed—and for the worse—since the adoption of the trade-agreements program in 1934, a program in which 21 of the principal trading nations of the world have joined with the United States. There is war in Europe and war in the Orient. Nations, for their own defense, are adopting rigorous controls over their internal economies and their foreign commerce—measures widely at variance with the principles of the trade-agreements program. But these facts offer no reason for abandoning now the program which is, in fact, the only available mechanism for meeting realistically the wartime conditions of international trade.

The policy and the framework of procedure laid down by Congress in the Trade Agreements Act of 1934 are broad enough to enable the President and his advisers from the Tariff Commission and the other Government departments to make the necessary technical changes and adjustments in our commercial relations with foreign countries, and to make them speedily, scientifically, and efficiently. If wartime trade must be carried on under restrictions and difficulties, the Trade Agreements Act and the trade-agreements organization are equal to the job. To abandon them now would leave the United States with no flexible and effective mechanism for protecting the interests of American agriculture and American industry either during the perilous time of war or in the post-war period of reconstruction.

In all ways, the Trade Agreements Act and the trade-agreements program conform to the requirements of a resolution adopted by the Kansas State Board of Agriculture at its sixty-ninth annual meeting, January 10-12, 1940. That resolution reads:

TARIFFS AND TREATIES

Reciprocal-trade treaties, when negotiated, should have the unanimous support and approval of the Secretary of State, Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce. They should be primarily for the purpose of restoring the export outlets for surplus commodities. We insist that this principle be adhered to in framing future trade treaties and that there be no reduction, either by legislative enactment or through treaties, in present agricultural tariffs on any farm product that would have the effect of holding or reducing domestic price levels below a proper balance with industrial prices.

The Trade Agreement Act, by its own terms, requires the approval of the Secretaries of State, Agriculture, and Commerce, for every agreement before the agreement is concluded. Congress, in passing the act, wrote into it as its purpose the enlargement of foreign markets for American products. The figures I have already given provide statistical proof that under this program the domestic price levels of farm goods have been helped to rise toward the proper balance with industrial prices, and have not been held down or reduced.

In the past 5 years the reciprocal trade-agreements program has proved its benefits in peacetime to industry and agriculture in Kansas and in the United States as a whole. Now, with wars raging in foreign countries, it is needed more urgently than ever to protect our interests and maintain our living standards. When the wars shall have ended, regardless of who are the victors or what alignments of nations shall emerge, the principles of the trade-agreements program offer a sound and tested foundation upon which the United States can take the leadership in setting up a new and better world economy. [Applause.]

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, 14 Democrats and 7 Republicans listened to the speech made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL], who spoke very feelingly of the industrialists who are manufacturing motor vehicles in Michigan. He also called attention to the men and women who are working in the factories producing motor vehicles.

He forgot to tell you that the average wage for those working in the motor industry, including those who are sweeping floors and doing like tasks, is 90 cents per hour and that the average daily wage in the Ford factory for 8 hours' work is $7.25; that, in contrast with that, the wages of the farmers, those who grow the food that keeps the factory worker alive, are less than $1 per day for from an 8- to a 10-hour day.

Some day, and I hope it will be soon, the farmer is going to demand, and insist upon receiving, a fair return for his labor. No one begrudges the city worker a living wage. On the other hand those who live in the cities and who enjoy many advantages, which it is physically impossible for the farmer and his family to have, should show a little sympathy, a little willingness—while they are upholding unions which want an ever-increasing wage and an ever-lessening hour—to aid the farmer in securing parity payments for the things he grows and sells.

LXXXVI—106

EVENTUALLY, WHY NOT NOW?

The House might well adopt that well-known slogan. Eventually, if the A. F. of L. is not to be swallowed alive, independent unions and the freedom of the independent worker destroyed, and American labor turned over to the mercies of the C. I. O. revenue collectors, the National Labor Relations Act must be amended.

For 2 years or more the demand for the drastic amendment of this act has been steadily growing until today there is no longer any doubt but that the American people are insisting upon a change.

The House Labor Committee for more than a year successfully prevented any amendments coming to the floor of the House. The House, in unprecedented action, appointed a special committee to, among other things, determine whether the National Labor Relations Board had been fair and impartial in its interpretation and administration of the law; whether the act needed amendment, and, if it did, what amendments were deemed advisable. That action on the part of the House was taken—and this proposition admits of no successful contradiction—because the House deemed its regular labor committee either incompetent or indolent.

The House Labor Committee took this rebuke sitting, if not lying, down. It has been going through the motions now and then of hearing witnesses. But it seems, from surface indications, no nearer to reporting out a bill than it was 2 years ago.

In the meantime, the House special committee, doing an excellent job, has demonstrated from the files of the Board itself that it has, in part at least, the answers to questions 1, 3, and 4 contained in the resolution creating it.

Its hearings have shown, in answer to question 1, that the Board has not been fair and impartial.

Whatever may be said of the intelligence and the abstract legal learning of the reviewing attorneys appointed by the Board, it must be conceded that not a few have no judicial or industrial experience which would qualify them to pass upon the questions which are submitted.

As an illustration, permit me to cite the appointment, as a reviewing attorney at a salary of $2,700 a year, of Ann Landy Wolf, a Hungarian woman, 27 years of age, who came to the United States in 1929, was naturalized in 1935; who has a husband drawing a salary of $4,600 a year in another Government department; who was appointed by the Board to review thousands of pages of testimony and then to state orally to the Board her conclusions, based upon her examination of that testimony. She is but one of several of like type.

Young men, possessing no greater qualifications than did she and in some instances perhaps not as great ability as she, have performed like functions.

The Board has employed trial examiners, one of whom, Pratt, made the statement to the effect that, when a hearing began, the employer "had two strikes on him." Another examiner, Seagle, called the statement of an attorney presenting a client's issue, a "lie" and referred to his argument as "idiotic discussions."

Another attorney, Solomon G. Lippman, 27 years of age, found to be incompetent for the work assigned to him, was transferred to another position with the Board and had his salary increased.

The hearings before the Smith committee have shown that the trial examiners and reviewing attorneys traveled outside the record, obtained and considered evidence which the party charged with an unfair labor practice had no opportunity to meet.

The Board, notwithstanding the fact that the N. L. R. A. itself provides that—section 4, subdivision (a)—

Nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the Board to appoint individuals for the purpose of conciliation or mediation (or for statistical work), where such service may be obtained from the Department of Labor—

Employed David G. Saposs, a Russian, whose writings clearly show that he is saturated with communistic doctrines, to make independent investigations and to report to investigators, trial and reviewing attorneys, and to the Board his,

Saposs', interpretation of testimony about to be given or testimony introduced in the hearings.

Now, get that proposition. Think of the viciousness, the downright wickedness, of the practice here in America of employing the methods of the Russia from which Saposs came. Can you conceive of anything more unfair, more destructive of confidence in administrative or judicial procedure, than the employing of an agent to go out and make an ex parte investigation and then report to an administrative officer or board his conclusions as to what certain testimony meant?

Such a procedure deprives the man accused of an unfair labor practice of his day in court. It deprives him of his right to be confronted with the witnesses against him. It deprives him of the right of cross-examination. It deprives him of an opportunity to meet and refute the charge which has been made against him. It deprives him of a fair, open trial.

Our Supreme Court on two occasions—in the Scottsboro case and in the case decided within the past week—has set aside the conviction of a number of Negroes on the sole ground that they did not have a fair and an impartial trial, this although there was much evidence to show that these men were guilty of a most revolting criminal offense.

Is the American employer to be denied a lesser opportunity—in fact, all opportunity—to meet his accusers face to face?

The hearings before the Smith committee have disclosed from the files of the Board itself that Lee Pressman, general counsel of the C. I. O., on the 2d day of June 1937 went to Pittsburgh, after consultation with the secretary of the Board, and instigated a strike; and that the Board thereafter aided in prolonging the strike by instituting charges against the Inland Steel Co. because it refused to perform an act not required by the National Labor Relations Act; an act which the Supreme Court had said it need not perform; an act which the purported author of the act had declared it could not be required to do.

The investigations show that the Board has, by its conduct, aided in the organizing campaigns of one labor organization.

The hearings before the Smith committee disclose that Chairman Madden has employed the methods of the blackmailer, of the extortionist, in his effort to coerce companies into the making of collective-bargaining contracts. This has been demonstrated by his own letters, which show that he asked another agency of the Government, the R. F. C., to withhold loans, not only from those who had been found guilty of unfair labor practices but from those who were about to be charged or were charged with the violation of the National Labor Relations Act. Such conduct is indefensible and no one who was not utterly obsessed with the idea that he was above the law would undertake such a course.

Enough has been said to show the utter unfairness of the present Board to fairly perform its duties. In passing, it might be added that the Chairman of the Board has, on more than one occasion, seen fit to use his official position and Federal funds appropriated for the administration of the act in an effort to create discord between members of the A. F. of L. and officials of that organization, with reference to the amendment of the act—this in violation of a Federal statute.

It is one thing for members of a Government department to appear before committees of Congress, having charge of legislation affecting their department, and express their views fairly and accurately. It is an entirely different thing for members of a Federal department to, unsolicited, use public funds in an effort to secretly induce third persons to lobby for measures the passage of which, directly or indirectly, inure to the benefit of that particular department. The function of department officials is to administer the laws enacted by Congress and give Congress the benefit of their experience.

There is no longer, on the record made by the Smith committee, on the record made in the public press, any doubt but that the Board is biased, partisan, and wholly unfitted for the interpretation and administration of the act.

The Evening Star of last Saturday carried what purported to be a statement of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr.

SMITH], chairman of the House investigating committee, that he hoped whatever amendments the committee might endorse would be reported to the House Labor Committee within 2 weeks, and that he stressed the need for quick action if any change is to be made in the National Labor Relations Act at the present session.

It is encouraging to know that the chairman of the special committee has reached that conclusion. For more than a year I have been suggesting to the House that, if it really wanted the N. L. R. A. amended, there was no reason why it should not do so.

About a year ago I suggested to the House that, so far as legislation was concerned, the House Labor Committee appeared to be trying to incubate a setting of china eggs or doorknobs. The same procedure apparently continues.

A further comment in the newspaper article referred to was to the effect that outstanding amendments now being considered by the special committee included: First, abolition of the present three-man Labor Board and its replacement by a new five-man Board. That provision can be incorporated in H. R. 4990, introduced by me in March of 1939.

Another provision being considered by the Smith committee is: Second, complete separation of the prosecuting and judicial functions of the Board. If you have the time and the patience to read it, you will find that H. R. 4990 contains a provision accomplishing that very thing.

Provision 3, now being considered by the committee, is as follows:

(3) Removal of the Board's authority to settle disputes among rival unions, such as the feuds between the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations, which have caused so much bitterness in the last few years.

H. R. 4990 does not contain that provision, but I have an amendment to that effect drafted, and as soon as Lee Pressman, general counsel for the C. I. O., commits himself, if he can be induced to commit himself either for or against such a provision when he testifies this week before the House Labor Committee, I will offer a bill containing that amendment.

H. R. 4990 contains many other amendments which, if we ever get a fair and just labor law, will be included in such an act.

It is a strange spectacle to see a House of Representatives, with a membership of over 400, acknowledge, as it does acknowledge, that the National Labor Relations Act should be amended and to watch that House, so paralyzed by what?—you answer—that it either cannot or will not bring out on the floor of the House a bill introduced to amend an act which we know should be amended, and there in open debate show its competency to perform the task entrusted to it by the people by writing a just and equitable labor law.

If you want action, walk up to the Clerk's desk and sign petition No. 23. Bring out the bill I introduced; then throw it in the wastebasket, if you wish, but write something in answer to the demand which our constituents have been making upon us. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and Mr. McCORMACK having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration House Joint Resolution 407, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include some tables therein.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by including a speech made by Col. Robert R. McCormack at the Lincoln Club banquet, Jackson, Mich., on the 15th of this month.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include an address delivered by the Secretary of Agriculture before the Agriculture Committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, earlier in the afternoon a member of the minority requested the majority to place in the RECORD the names of a thousand or so economists who protested the enactment of the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point an excerpt from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 5, 1930, which supplies this information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

TARIFF PROTEST BY ECONOMISTS AND TEACHERS OF ECONOMICS

The undersigned American economists and teachers of economics strongly urge that any measure which provides for a general upward revision of tariff rates be denied passage by Congress, or if passed be vetoed by the President.

We are convinced that increased protective duties would be a mistake. They would operate, in general, to increase the prices which domestic consumers would have to pay. By raising prices they would encourage concerns with higher costs to undertake production, thus compelling the consumer to subsidize waste and inefficiency in industry. At the same time they would force him to pay higher rates of profit to established firms which enjoyed lower production costs. A higher level of protection, such as is contemplated by both the House and Senate bills, would therefore raise the cost of living and injure the great majority of our citizens.

Few people could hope to gain from such a change. Miners, construction, transportation and public-utility workers, professional people, and those employed in banks, hotels, newspaper offices, in the wholesale and retail trades, and scores of other occupations would clearly lose, since they produce no products which could be protected by tariff barriers.

The vast majority of farmers, also, would lose. Their cotton, corn, lard, and wheat are export crops and are sold in the world market. They have no important competition in the home market. They cannot benefit, therefore, from any tariff which is imposed upon the basic commodities which they produce. They would lose through the increased duties on manufactured goods, however, and in a double fashion. First, as consumers they would have to pay still higher prices for the products, made of textiles, chemicals, iron, and steel, which they buy. Second, as producers, their ability to sell their products would be further restricted by the barriers placed in the way of foreigners who wished to sell manufactured goods to us.

Our export trade, in general, would suffer. Countries cannot permanently buy from us unless they are permitted to sell to us, and the more we restrict the importation of goods from them by means of ever higher tariffs the more we reduce the possibility of our exporting to them. This applies to such exporting industries as copper, automobiles, agricultural machinery, typewriters, and the like as fully as much as it does to farming. The difficulties of these industries are likely to be increased still further if we pass a higher tariff. There are already many evidences that such action would inevitably provoke other countries to pay us back in kind by levying retaliatory duties against our goods. There are few more ironical spectacles than that of the American Government, as it seeks, on the one hand, to promote exports through the activity of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, while, on the other hand, by increasing tariffs it makes exportation ever more difficult. President Hoover has well said, in his message to Congress on April 16, 1929, "It is obviously unwise protection which sacrifices a greater amount of employment in exports to gain a less amount of employment from imports."

We do not believe that American manufacturers, in general, need higher tariffs. The report of the President's committee on recent economic changes has shown that industrial efficiency has increased, that costs have fallen, that profits have grown with amazing rapidity since the end of the war. Already our factories supply our people with over 96 percent of the manufactured goods which they consume, and our producers look to foreign markets to absorb the increasing output of their machines. Further barriers to trade will serve them not well, but ill.

Many of our citizens have invested their money in foreign enterprises. The Department of Commerce has estimated that such investments, entirely aside from the war debts, amounted to between $12,555,000,000 and $14,555,000,000 on January 1, 1929. These investors, too, would suffer if protective duties were to be increased, since such action would make it still more difficult for their foreign creditors to pay them the interest due them.

America is now facing the problem of unemployment. Her labor can find work only if her factories can sell their products. Higher tariffs would not promote such sales. We cannot increase employment by restricting trade. American industry, in the present crisis, might well be spared the burden of adjusting itself to new schedules of protective duties.

Finally we would urge our Government to consider the bitterness which a policy of higher tariffs would inevitably inject into our international relations. The United States was ably represented at the World Economic Conference which was held under the auspices of the League of Nations in 1927. This conference adopted a resolution announcing that "the time has come to put an end to the increase in tariffs and to move in the opposite direction." The higher duties proposed in our pending legislation violate the spirit of this agreement and plainly invite other nations to compete with us in raising further barriers to trade. A tariff war does not furnish good soil for the growth of world peace.

 ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein brief tables and a list of manufacturers in the State of Michigan, together with a quotation from Mr. GIFFORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a newspaper clipping which is a tribute to the late Robert Fechner, Director of the C. C. C.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so
 ordered.

THE LATE HONORABLE CYRENUS COLE

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so
 ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Speaker, the passing of the late Honorable Cyrenus Cole, one of Iowa's distinguished citizens, came as a distinct shock to me and, I know also, to those Members of the body who were privileged to know him. For 12 years, 1921 to 1933, Congressman Cole ably represented the interests of his constituency in the former Fifth Congressional District of Iowa and rendered marked service to his State in the National House of Representatives.

Retiring voluntarily from public office at the end of his sixth term in Congress, he devoted the remaining years of a busy and useful life to the compilation of a history of Iowa which is acknowledged to be a worthy contribution to the literature of the State and to serve as a fitting monument for a splendid citizen and public servant.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business on the calendar for Wednesday next may be dispensed with.

 ordered.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr.
 DREWRY (at the request of Mr. BLAND), on account of sickness.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:
 S. 2617. An act to authorize the leasing of the undeveloped coal and asphalt deposits of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in Oklahoma; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, February 20, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God be merciful unto us, and bless us, and cause His face to shine upon us. Heavenly Father, with our souls enrobed with this prayer, and with a chastening sense of our failures and needs, we pray for Thy guiding grace and wisdom. May Thy presence with us be like the sun that radiates light, like the stars that shed calmness, like the morning that sings freshness, and like the evening that whispers quietness. This day let us be at rest in the Father's love and in the gracious protection of His Son, Jesus Christ, the friend of man and the Saviour of the world. Do Thou ever enfold us in the blessed security of the everlasting arms. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.
